Peabody has voted to establish an electric plant of 120 arc lights, at cost of $47,000. The enterprise is an excellent one, but isn't the appropriation pretty high?—Danvers Mirror.

That's what the tax payers are asking, brother.

Mr. Allen on the school question seems to have met with approval everywhere. The school question is a good question to be backed up, as it means home support, which, though silent at the polls is a mighty influence.—Boston Home Journal.

A. best, Chili is no more than a juvenile fly deposit on the map of the world, and will be only exercising ordinary prudence by not getting "too fresh" in her conduct towards the United States. She should recall the fate of Italy, and "go slow." We have an American administration and an American Secretary of State in office now.—Milford Journal.

Essex County Prohibition Club.

The Essex County Prohibition Club assembled in quarterly meeting in Temperance Hall Peabody Wednesday, Oct. 14. Mrs. M. O. Stevens led the devotional service. Rev. M. D. Collins of Beverly gave an address at the morning session. The Demorest Silver Medal Contest which formed a part of the afternoon session, was a great success. The hall was well filled and the ten speakers sustained their parts in an able manner. The judges found that the competition was a close one. The Medal was awarded to Miss Maud Sinclair of Peabody, who spoke, "A voice from the Poor House." Gifts of books from the club were given to the other speakers as souvenirs of the first contest. Supt. F. W. Clark of Northampton gave a history of this contest work, which he considers the most important movement of the present day. In the evening in Town Hall, Rev. J. H. Hector lectured on "Reminiscences of the War of the Rebellion," which abounded in humor and genuine wit. He concluded with an original poem on "How Found and a Half Million of Colored People Became Free."

The Peabody W. C. T. U. accompanied by Mr. Charles Pearson will conduct service at the Alms House tomorrow afternoon (Sunday) leaving South Church at 2.15.

Gilhooley—What a wonderful thing the electric is? Gus de Smith—Yes it is wonderful. I expect after a while it will be used to make the crops grow, instead of the sun. "There are some crops that thrive now by electric light." "Nonsense." "No nonsense about it. There are lots of young men in New York now who sow most of their wild oats by electric light."

The Republican Caucus.

The Republican caucus was called to order in Town Hall Tuesday evening by B. F. Southwick. After reading the call, B. G. Hall was elected chairman and Charles M. Poor secretary.

B. F. Southwick took the floor and after a brief speech nominated Frank H. Appleton Esq., as candidate for Representative to the General Court. Dr. C. C. Pike objected on the ground that Mr. Appleton voted for the Donovan bill, and he therefore thought other good Republicans could be found who would be more satisfactory to the friends of temperance. The doctor recognized the able and faithful service that had been rendered by Mr. Appleton, but the Donovan bill was too much for him, and he therefore nominated Alexander B. Merrill.

Mr. Merrill promptly took the floor and declined emphatically to take the nomination, and he expressed great surprise that his name was mentioned. Dr. Pike thought the present incumbent had made a grievous error and wished the gentleman were present that he might give him his reasons.

B. F. Southwick arose to explain that the Donovan bill was one on which temperance people differed widely in their views. Thought Mr. Appleton friendly to temperance legislation.

The vote was then taken and Mr. Appleton was nominated with but one vote against him.

The old town committee was re-elected and the meeting adjourned.

Northerners Down South.

There is a large crowd of northern people constantly in attendance at the Southern Inter-State Exposition in the city of Raleigh, N. C., and they are well paid for the expense of a trip. It is, as we have heretofore said, really more interesting for the Northerners than a trip to the Chicago Exposition.

Hundreds of people are flocking to the Exposition to see what the negro has to show for quarter of a century of freedom. Right well have the colored improved in their Southern homes, and it ought to be gratifying to all who desire to see the Union perpetuated to know that the white people and colored people are living together in peace, and working shoulder to shoulder for the development of the Southern section of the Union. For what is to the advantage of one section is to the advantage of the whole. We of this part of the Union fought to keep the Southern part from leaving the Union, and we succeeded. The negroes were freed, and it is gratifying to see that their work is not in vain; that there is a great improvement over the old South that in every nook and corner of that favored land space and prosperity are on the increase.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's

Distress

After

Eating

Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat I had but little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced."

LOCAL LINES.

The co-operative Bank receives deposits and sells its loans tonight.

The Chataqua meets with Rev. Mr. Reynolds tonight.

Miss Amy, daughter of Simon P. Buxton was tendered a surprise party Thursday evening. And a very pleasant evening was spent.

The British American Association will celebrate their fourth anniversary with an entertainment and banquet at their hall on Thursday the 28th. The catering will be done by McCrillis & Co.

Next Thursday evening Past Supreme Master Barnes of San Francisco, whose versatile talent has amused and instructed crowded audiences in every state of the Union, will entertain the people of this town in Peabody Institute. He comes under the auspices of Geo. Peabody Lodge A. O. U. W. Tickets can be obtained without money or price of the members. After the entertainment a banquet will be served by McCrillis & Co., for which there will be a charge of seventy-five cents.

The veteran firemen will enter their tub at the Nashua muster next Thursday. Railroad fare for the excursion has been reduced to $1.50. The assessment will be about $2.00.

D. N. Crowley of Danvers was nominated for the Senate on Wednesday.

The Democratic representative caucus was held in Town Hall, Monday evening. Philip H. Coleman of the Board of Selectmen was again nominated to contest the honors with Mr. F. H. Appleton, the Republican nominee. There was no contest for the nomination, it evidently being the general belief that Mr. Appleton will be re-elected. The assembly was presided over by Richard Barry and D. J. O'Connor acted as secretary.

In Brooklyn, N. Y., the Board of Health issued a notice last spring when railway companies were beginning to put out open cars, requesting the companies to avoid their use until warm weather, upon the ground of public health. A similar request to the local company would not be amiss.

George H. Green has discontinued his express business and entered the employ of the Beverly fish market.

Mr. Lester Newhall of this town, formerly clerk at the drug store of Wm. T. Lee, but at present in the employ of a Salem firm, has been awarded a diploma by the Boston School of Pharmacy. He was one of thirteen successful matriculants out of a class of forty-one. Mr. Newhall is a native of this town and a graduate of the Peabody high school. He was a good scholar while in school, and from the first of his apprenticeship with Mr. Lee had exhibited marked aptitude for the business to which he has devoted the utmost care and study.

At the annual meeting of the Exchange News Rooms this week, Alex B. Merrill was chosen president and Albert M. Wilkinson, secretary and treasurer.

The open cars run upon the Naumkeag line this week look cold and poverty stricken.

Jacob C. Rogers returned from Europe on Wednesday.

Clarence W. Moore is exhibiting his new ordieries barrell closer at the Food and Health Exposition, Mechanic's Building, Boston, where it is attracting marked attention. A large crowd surrounds his exhibit continually and many orders are being taken by him for barrels for various purposes, a great many as garbage barrels for domestic and hotel use.

Union post 50, G. A. R. turned out thirteen members Wednesday morning to take part in the parade in Salem. They were accompanied by the new Peabody Fire and Drum corps, and took special cars over the Essex road.

The old Tippecanoe Rifles, the Republican torchlight battalion of 1888 will re-organize this evening for the purpose of doing escort duty to the speakers of the rally in Town Hall, Tuesday evening.

Jeremiah P. Bresnahan and Charles Patterson were arraigned in the police court Wednesday charged with assault and robbery. Each was held for the grand jury in $300.

It cost the Town for treatment of nineteen patients at Danvers Asylum for the quarter ending October first $811.57. This is the largest demand ever made upon the town for a like period. Twenty-one patients chargeable to the town are now in the Asylum. The cost to the Poor Department for care of patients at Danvers is steadily increasing the present expense was about $1000 per annum more than it was six years ago owing to the increased number of patients.

The Boston & Maine will run an excursion to accommodate those who desire to attend the Food and Health Exposition at Boston Wednesday. The fare will be half rates.

A black spaniel dog belonging to Samuel C. Lord was run over by a horse car Wednesday afternoon and his thigh broken. The injured canine was sent to the Gardner Farm where it was attended by Dr. Wood. He died in a few hours of his injuries.

Ex-Governor John D. Long, ex-Congressman Greenhalge of Lowell, and Gen. William Coyswell will address the Republican Rally Tuesday evening.

The Essex Electric street railway company will not remove their office from the premises of George Stevens and passengers can regale themselves with hot lunch, confectionary, fruit or cigars from Mr. Stevens' counters as heretofore. The cars will run regularly on Sundays.

Monday evening officers Pingree, Carlin and Wiggin captured a small keg containing about two gallons of beer at the house of Florence McCarthy on Midway street.

Rev. Joseph M. Hobbs was in town yesterday visiting old friends.

At this season of the year, housekeepers are renovating and replenishing the domestic establishment, young (and some not so young) people are marrying, and in a variety of ways necessities for domestic equipments are created. C. H. Goulding has a fine line of household furniture which he will finish to match the other fittings with which it is to be surrounded. Curtains, carpets, carpet sweepers, and about every thing you need to fit up a house can be bought at his store on Walnut street, as economically as at Metropolitan emporiums.

Our readers cannot fail to be interested in the ad of Locke Photograph Co., which appears in another column. This Co. which now offers to cash patrons a beautifully colored pastel have already well earned their reputation for liberality in giving absolutely free 250 cabinet pictures to the mothers of as many different babies.

The Grand Jury reported seventy-nine indictments to the Superior Court at Lawrence on Monday, two of the number being Peabody cases; one for receiving stolen property.

D. P. McCarthy of this town was elected a member of the Democratic County committee at the county convention held in Salem last Monday.

The St. John's C. T. A. and the Father Mathew C. T. A. Societies accompanied by the National Drum Corps of Beverly and the American Drum Corps of Lynn made a short parade last Monday forenoon, previous to taking the train for Haverhill where they participated in the Essex County temperance parade, each society turning out about sixty members. They bore in their ranks their society banners and the stars and stripes, and were decorated with appropriate badges. On their return, a social dance was held in F. M. C. T. A. hall on Walnut street.

A horse belonging to Bowman Viles of West Peabody was bitten in the ankle by a dog some time since and last week he died from what he believes was hydrophobia. The animal decreased in weight several hundred pounds between the time he was bitten and his demise.

Work of relaying the rails of the Lynn and Boston street Railway began last Monday morning at the Lexington monument. A flat rail resting upon stringers is laid as far as Upton's Glue factory, at which point a T rail will be laid to Wyoma, weighing 50 pounds to the yard. The rails are wired as the work of laying proceeds, so that when completed there will be nothing left to be done upon the streets but erect poles and string wires. When the electric cars are put on next spring, half hour trips will be made all day with some extra runs to make fifteen minutes time in the busy parts of the day. It is thought the running time from Peabody to Lynn will be greatly reduced by the new power.

T. J. Quinn morocco manufacturer formerly of Peabody is removing his business from Woburn where he has been located since leaving Peabody, to the factory of C. H. Drew at Stoneham. The new quarters will accommodate fifty employees.

Aulson & Mohan have commenced business in their new quarters in Lynn, the Hoffman factory.

Mr. George W. Winslow, a former resident of Peabody, died at Washington, D. C., on Monday at the age of eighty years.

The precinct officers who served at the elections a year ago have been reappointed with the exception of S. P. Messer in precinct three. Elbridge Rust was appointed in his place as Mr. Messer was engaged in business that prevented his serving.

The Essex Electric cars have been supplied with a line of placards of the Great Western Street Railway Advertising Agency of Brockton, during the present week. The typographical work was executed at the Press Office. Several of our enterprising local tradesmen are represented among the group of advertisers.

The second assembly of the F. M. C. T. A. Ladies Aid Society will be held in Town Hall on Friday evening October 30th. Music will be furnished by Langford's Orchestra.

Thomas H. O'Keefe the teamster and furniture mover has moved into his new house at the head of Pierpoint street.

We are pleased to note the improved condition of our townsman, John Linehan, who has been an inmate of the Massachusetts General Hospital for quite a long time where he has been receiving treatment.

The rain and wind on Tuesday night did considerable damage to the parts of the town in a small way. Many branches were broken from the shade trees among other minor casualties.

her story that I will only give a brief summary of her confession. She told me that she was engaged to Mr. Frank Holden, and had been for more than a year, but that the engagement had never been announced. About six months before she had learned that her fiancé was paying marked attention to a shopgirl in Jordan & Marsh's, with whom he had become enamored. He offered her honorable marriage, but the girl was too sensible not to foresee that complications would arise owing to their different stations in life and refused him. Holden, however, was persistent, and Miss Mason, who did not know that he was already engaged, submitted to his wishes to this extent. She told him he must leave her and see nothing of her for three months. If at the end of that time he still wished to marry her she would consent.

It was further agreed that he should inform her of his decision in the following manner. When the three months were past if he still loved her he should send her a bit of red ribbon. If not a word of any kind.

All this Miss Ormsby discovered, as well as the date on which he would send the token. She knew well enough that it would be red, and she knew also that as long as Miss Mason lived her own love was vain. She likewise learned that Miss Mason was of a highly nervous temperament and very much in love with Mr. Holden, so she felt quite sure that should he disappoint her she would do something desperate.

It now only remained to send a bit of purple on the day that Holden sent the red ribbon, and so arrange matters that the shop girl should have several hours at her disposal before her lover could discover the trick.

Miss Ormsby did not care to take the package herself for fear that she might be recognized, and meeting me used me as the reader knows.

My providential delay was all that saved the shop girl's life, for it gave Holden a chance to get to Malden before she could harm herself. She was an orphan and all her family were buried there, so Miss Ormsby reasoned rightly enough that thither she would go to die among them.

When she had finished her confession I handed her the letter—it contained only a blank piece of paper—and then turned to look out of the window. Right opposite me in the other wing was Holden's parlor, and I could see both occupants very plainly.

I then thought it queer that I heard no exclamation from Miss Ormsby, but my thoughts were rudely interrupted by a slight click. Turning quickly around, I was just in time to prevent my captive from escaping me for ever. I wrested a revolver from her grasp and said as I unlocked it, "You were going to kill yourself. Why?"

"Because the letter is blank, and you have extorted a confession from me by a trick. You mean to inform the police about me. I could not bear the scandal. Then he would tell anyway. He will never forgive me for killing her."

"You need not fear," I replied, "he will never tell, and you have not committed murder. See?" I pointed out to her the parlor and the two happy figures that occupied it, and putting the pistol in my pocket quietly left the room.—Harvard Advocate.

Hawkers and Peddlers, What ear-splitting cries we hear daily in the streets of every large city! But these itinerant dealers who hawk their wares about are, when under proper restriction, a useful portion of the community, and not such nuisances as the catarrh hawkers. This is a stubborn disease to conquer, but Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy does it. It is mild, soothing and antiseptic, unlike snuffs that irritate, or solutions that burn. It corrects offensive breath, and restores taste, smell and hearing. Nasal catarrh often ends in consumption. Apply the only cure in time. Price 50 cents, by all druggists.

Economy in Cigars.

A well known business man walked into a cigar store the other morning and took out two coins. One was a dollar and the other a half dollar. He laid them both down on the case and pointed to a box of imported cigars, saying, "Give me a dollar's worth of those." The clerk handed them out and the buyer laid the six that he wanted in a row along the case.

Then he said to the clerk, "Give me half a dollar's worth of any good five cent cigar." The clerk did as he was bid, and the five centers were laid along in a row also. The gentleman then took the row of imported cigars and cut the ends off of them all. Then he mixed the five centers and the twenty centers up together and put them all into his capacious vest pockets.

A friend who was standing near and who had watched the operation with a good deal of curiosity, said, "Wherefore?" "Simply this, my boy," replied the man addressed, "I am in a business where I have to give away a good many cigars. I am a man who likes a good cigar. I cannot afford to give away the kind of cigars that I smoke myself, so I buy a day's supply and cut the ends off. Then I buy some cheap ones.

"When it is necessary for me to give away a cigar I pull out a handful and offer one to the person, whoever he may be. He thinks that the ones with the ends cut off I have had in my mouth, and takes one of the cheap ones, where-by I save a good many dollars in the course of a year and also keep myself on good terms with the people to whom it is necessary to give cigars."—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

What's the use of feeling languid, Mopy, dull and blue? Cleanse the blood and gives it vigor: Make the old man new.

How? I'll tell you. To the drug store.

Go this very day—Buy a medicine to banish All your ills away—And that medicine is Dr. Pierce's Medical Discovery, the very best blood-purifier on earth. It builds up and strengthens the system because it cleanses the blood, and that's what the system must have to be strong and healthy. There's nothing that equals it. Absolutely sold on trial! Your money back, if it doesn't benefit or cure you.

How to Handle Guns.

Having been asked by friends frequently for advice for their boys in handling guns, I send you a digest of same:

Empty or loaded, never point a gun toward yourself or any other person.

When a field, carry your gun at the half cock. If in cover, let your hand shield the hammers from whiplow twice.

When riding from one shooting ground to another, or whenever you have your gun in any conveyance, remove the cartridges, if a breech loader, it being so easy to replace them. If a muzzle loader, remove the caps, brush off the nipples and place a wad on each nipple, letting down the hammers on wads—simply removing caps sometimes leaves a little fulminate on the nipple, and a blow on the hammer when down discharges it.

Never draw a gun toward you by the barrels.

More care is necessary in the use of a gun in a boat than elsewhere, the limited space, confined action and uncertain motion making it dangerous at the best. If possible no more than two persons should occupy a boat. Hammerless guns are a constant danger to persons boating.

Always clean your guns thoroughly as soon as you return from a day's sport, no matter how tired you feel. The consequence of its always being ready for service is ample return for the few minutes' irksome labor.—Forest and Stream.

DANA'S SARSAPARILLA is guaranteed to absolutely cure disease, and it does it too.

Mme. Geoffrin's Husband.

Mme. Geoffrin married, at the age of fourteen, M. Geoffrin, a wealthy glass manufacturer and lieutenant colonel of the National Guard. His duty as husband seems to have been to provide the funds for her social campaigns and to watch over the details of the menage. It is related of him that some person gave him a history to read, and when asked for the successive volumes, regularly palmed off upon him the first, as if it were new. At last he was heard to say that he thought the author "repeated himself a little."

A book printed in double columns he read straight across the page, remarking that "it seemed to be very good, but was rather abstract." One day a visitor inquired after the silent, white haired old gentleman who was in the habit of sitting at the head of the table. "Oh, he was my husband," replied Mme. Geoffrin, "before he died."—San Francisco Argonaut.

Scallops in Maine.

A big scallop from Mount Desert has a diameter of nine inches, and the edible portion will weigh ten ounces. How long the scallop takes to grow before reaching maturity does not seem to be known, but it is believed to be of age at its fifteenth year. The mollusk, with other pectens, is not chained like the oyster to the rock. It enjoys locomotion.—New York Times.

Take good advice.—I have suffered with bad headaches for years, and have tried many remedies without obtaining relief. I was advised to give Salvo's Oil a trial, and it has entirely cured me. Edward Baltz, Butcher, La Fayette Market, Baltimore, Md.

THE POWER OF LOVE.

The world is so changed since I knew her! The sky is a tenderer blue. The wood thrush sings sweeter and truer—Yea, all the wide world is made new.

The breezes that blow from the clover And kiss all the flowers on the way. Are whispering over and over A name that is sweeter than they.

Oh, love, thou hast fettered and bound me. I never shall be heart free again. Yet life flows like music around me, And flow'rs are the links of my chain. —James Buckham in Detroit Free Press.

How Cloth Is Tested.

When the cloth arrives, it is slowly passed over a double roller which measures the yards, and carefully examined for the purpose of discovering any defects in the manufacture. If there are any—broken threads or loosely woven spots—they are indicated by sewing a string in the margin, and the cutter is thus able to avoid the defective portion.

Then we cut off a small piece of the goods and put it outside on a window-sill, where, for ten days, it is exposed to the sun and the rain. If it fades, it is rejected. Then we test by chemicals to see if the dye stuff is indigo, which is the surest dye that can be made. If the color produced by the use of this test is a bright orange, it indicates that the dye has an indigo basis.

After that a piece of the goods is put in a solution of caustic potash, which has the effect of eating up the animal fiber and leaving the vegetable fiber. Some cloth manufacturers nowadays, instead of making their goods of separate threads of cotton and of wool, take cotton and wool and mix them in such a way that no one, by merely feeling, can tell whether or not there is cotton in the piece. The only way we can know is by boiling a piece of the goods in this solution, which has the effect of eating up the wool and leaving the cotton.—Interview in New York Epoch.

The Czar's Romance.

The following episode is said to have been related by the czar himself to intimate friends: His elder brother, who died at Nice, was, as is generally known, first betrothed to Princess Dagmar of Denmark. On his deathbed he left his brother, the present czar, a letter in which he begged him to take his place in the heart of the princess. The Grand Duke Alexander, however, was a very bashful lover, and had not the courage to carry out his dying brother's last wish. till one day the Grand Duke Vladimir said to him, "If you will not fulfill the wish of our dead Nicholas, I shall propose for the hand of the princess myself."

A short time after the Grand Duke Alexander set off to Copenhagen, and one day, being alone with the Princess Dagmar, he handed her, tremblingly the letter of his brother. When the princess had read it she blushed and said, "I also received a letter from Nicholas in which he begged me to become your wife." Alexander asked to be allowed to read the letter. The princess fetched it and together they read it. The result was a marriage.—Cor. London News.

Pay of Swiss Embroiderers.

The common old embroidering hand machine of 1827, with few improvements, is the one that is used today for the millions of fine embroideries that are sold to all quarters of the globe. There are, perhaps, 25,000 of them in use in eastern Switzerland, the number of the needles averaging about 250 to the machine, and the number of stitches not exceeding 2,000 to the needle daily. As embroiderers are paid on the stitch basis only, and sometimes as low as 4 cents a hundred, they have very small earnings left after paying their threaders and other expenses. At the present time fifty cents, sometimes less, is a fair average of the daily earnings of a hard working embroiderer, who must toil a long day with head, hands and feet working his machine.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Youthful Connoisseur.

Bessie is an original little thing, and her comments are often very amusing. Having been brought up in a family of bric-a-brac hunters, her knowledge of ceramics is quite remarkable for a child. One day her mother noticed her gazing fixedly at her great-grandmother, a very old woman, whose kind old face was literally a network of fine wrinkles. "What are you looking at, Bessie?" she asked the child. "I was only thinking," she answered promptly, "what a remarkably fine specimen of old 'crackle' granny was." This was much to the old lady's delight, she being a bit of a collector herself.—New York Tribune.

New England Piety.

There are communities of sturdy New England people where the general rule that religious services languish in the absence of a pastor does not hold. In North Warren weekly prayer meetings have been held for over seventy years uninterruptedly, and this without the help of a minister, except for an occasional lecture. At first the meetings were held at private dwellings, but for over thirty years the people have met at a schoolhouse.—Rockland (Me.) Tribune.

The English opinion is that the farther south you go for oyster brood the poorer you get. A certain rock oyster from Scotland "has a firmness, richness and smack of the sea," according to an English authority, "that is greatly preferred by many to even the best Thames natives."

Charles H. Townsend, in his report upon the pearl fisheries of California, says that a pearl shell company of Lower California has an invested capital of $10,000. From 400 to 500 men are employed. The season begins in May in the vicinity of Cape St. Lucas.

An iron last, made by Spence, Boggs & Co., Martin's Ferry, O., for John Farmhouse, a colored preacher of Charlotte, N. C., is 20 1/2 inches long and 7 1/2 inches wide. The owner of this monstrous foot is 6 feet 10 inches high and weighs 410 pounds.

The Dearest Spot on Earth

is the spot that's washed out without Pearline. It costs in clothes, in the rubbing and scrubbing that wears them out quickly; it takes twice the time, and double the labor. It's expensive washing before you get through with it—and the cost comes home to you, no matter who does the work.

Pearline saves money by saving work, wear, and time. It hurts nothing; washes and cleans everything. It costs no more than common soap, but it does more. It's cheap to begin with—but it's cheapest in the end.

Beware of imitations of PEARLINE which are being peddled from door to door.

ASTRIDE A LIVE SHARK.

DARING FEAT OF A CALIFORNIA SWIM-MING TEACHER.

A Man's Sport with a Marine Monster.
The Entire Harmlessness of a Huge Basking Shark Amply Demonstrated.
The Visitors No Longer Afraid.

That a man should take a ride on a live shark's back, apparently with all the delight of a wild cowboy breaking in an unruly mustang, would be difficult to believe unless circumstances were presented to verify it. Such an occurrence has really taken place, however,
and at so short a distance from San Francisco that any doubting Thomas can easily satisfy himself by making a personal investigation.

For the past few years the fishermen
in the northern part of Monterey bay near Santa Cruz, have been greatly annoyed by basking sharks. These sharks, while in search of food, often run into the nets of fishermen, and in thrashing about and trying to escape from the meshes which enfold
them, tear the nets and injure them so that the fishermen at times suffer the loss of hundreds of dollars. Sometimes a shark struggles about so much in the water as to wrap the nets around it in such a manner that escape is impossible,
and the huge fish dies from the exhaustion produced by its wild efforts to get free. To extricate the dead fish from the nets it is sometimes necessary to tow
it ashore, and to recover part of the loss sustained in the destruction of the nets
the fishermen try out the liver of the shark and obtain a quantity of cheap
but profitable oil.

AN OCULAR DEMONSTRATION.
A huge basking shark about thirty or forty feet long became entangled in the nets of some fishermen off Sausal Point about four miles from Santa Cruz. The shark, still alive and enfolded in the nets, was towed by the fishermen in boats to the wharf at Capitola. Its arrival created great excitement among the visitors at that resort. The fact that sharks, any sharks, were near the beach drove hundreds of bathers from the water, and people began to make up their minds to leave the place. No amount of assurance on the part of the proprietors of the hotel or the fishermen that basking sharks were not man eaters, and that many had been caught with no accident happening, could entirely quiet the fears of the visitors, and bathing was almost given up.

Some ocular demonstration of the fact that a basking shark was harmless therefore became necessary. Swimming Teacher Swanson, of the Capitola baths,
then determined to give an exhibition with the shark which should convince the most timid. A performance followed the like of which no man ever participated in before. Swanson put on a bathing suit and swam to the wharf
where the partially exhausted monster lay, still partly wrapped in the torn and tangled fishing nets. Slowly approaching the gasping yet enraged monster, a whale in size if not in species, Swanson swam close to its side, and then clambered slowly on top, a moderately easy task to accomplish, as the shark lay almost entirely under water. Sifting astride the huge fish like a baby on an elephant, the bold swimmer shouted in triumphant boldness at the several hundred people on the wharf, who had gathered to witness the strange performance.

GOT USED TO IT.
His song of success was quickly cut short, for as soon as the lazy shark realized it had gathered something more on its back it commenced to thrash about and threw Swanson off. Women in the crowd shrieked in fear and men held their breath in excitement. It was hardly a minute, however, before Swanson appeared uninjured and laughing outside of the line of foam caused by the shark's struggles. The crowd on the wharf breathed more freely when they saw the man emerge from the seething waters and realized that he had not been devoured, as they expected him to be.
The undaunted swimmer again went to the side of the shark, and once more mounted his marine steed. The shark again showed its fear and anger by shaking him off, but not so violently as before. With great persistence Swanson again climbed on to the monster.

What seemed before to the many spectators a most foolhardy act, and but the courtship of certain death, now became a strangely comical sight. Swanson mounted the fish, and the shark becoming accustomed to its queer burden, merely rolled the man off each time he got on its back, simply turning lazily in the water and shaking himself. This was repeated several times, and the large crowd of people who came expecting to see the man killed and eaten departed laughing at the ludicrous ending of the performance. Swanson became the hero of the camp. Bathing was resumed and even more freely indulged in as a consequence of the exhibition, and no one can now be found in Camp Capitola who will admit that they fear a shark, or a basking shark at least.—San Francisco Chronicle.

An Interesting Calculation.
An uptown man, having nothing else
to do, thought he would try an experiment, so he turned the hands of a clock in his room the full twenty-four hours of a day, and found it took, with moderate movement, one minute of time to accomplish that task. He then made a calculation of how long it would take him to turn off the full measure of a man's life, which, according to the Scriptures, is
"three score years and ten," and found that it would take seventeen and one-half days to turn the hands of the clock to represent seventy years.—Philadelphia Record.

A Wonderful Place.

A wonderful place in Tinajas, about 30 miles southwest of Mission Camp, Arizona. The mountains at this point have one face of hard, smooth granite.
All the waters falling on this entire basin are, by a most extraordinary provision of nature, combined with the efforts of primitive man, made to flow through a succession of nine wells or tanks, carved in the solid granite of which the mountains is composed, says the St. Louis Republican. These remarkable receptacles are placed or excavated, one above the other, the upper tanks being approachable only by a difficult and circuitous route through a perfect chaos of gigantic boulders. The lower tanks are easy of access, and are often drained of their contents by men and animals
traveling between Yuma, and Sonora.
To one standing at the foot of the mountain on which the upper tanks are situated, no indication of their existence is afforded, nor does climbing the smooth, steep mountain side seem possible to one unacquainted with the way. This latter fact is most deplorable, because the upper tanks have never been known to be dry. Within two miles of these Arizonian wonders are certainly 150 or 200 graves, each marked by rows of stones laid in the form of a cross. These are the resting places of men, famished for water, who had expended their last strength in reaching Tinajas, only to find the lower tanks
dry, and, ignorant of the upper ones,
had lain down in despair to die.

FRED GOLDSMITH WALKER.

O life, how mystical thou art!
One day brings joy, the other sadness,
And keeps the nature of the heart
In sorrow or in gladness.
Some days have the bright sun shining,
Clouds of doubt and fear roll by,
Followed by those of a silvered lining,
Filling with glories life's changeable sky.
But the world keeps on its ceaseless roll,
'Tis only God who is our friend,
He lingers by and makes the soul
Noble and true to that coming end,
When narrow grave will claim the forms Who've triumphed o'er life's countless storms.

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS.

An Old Masonic Relic.

When the workmen were removing the doorsteps from the house of the late Thos. Shehan, they found the square and compasses, which were given to the late John A. Hoyt, a member of Chas. C. Dame Lodge, which before his decease he passed to the Worshipful Master, W. S. Symonds to be presented to the Lodge. While this emblem was in the possession of Brother Symonds, in looking over his collection of curious and ancient specimens, I recognized this relic as one I had known many years ago, and had a part to do in its formation. As several of the brethren have requested me to give a history of its origin and disappearance, I very cheerfully comply.

As early as 1858, there was living at Parsons' Mills, Byfield parish, an old Irishman by the name of George Perry.
He was the village blacksmith, a very superior workman at his trade. He came to this country in early manhood, and was among the first to locate in this vicinity. Before leaving Dublin, Ireland, he undoubtedly became a Mason. He was a very intelligent man, an honest and upright citizen, with the falling of a love for strong drink and an occasional indulgence to excess. Bro. Perry well knew the prejudices of the Catholic church against secret societies, more especially his brethren in Free Masonry, not because the order was harmful, but because it allowed none of its members to assume obligations superior to the Catholic faith, but notwithstanding this prejudice, many of the most intelligent Roman Catholics have taken the Masonic vows and assumed their obligations. Bro. Perry knew all this, and more, and consequently kept the fact of his relations to Masonry, a profound secret except to such patrons of the ancient craft as Dr. Richard Sewell, and George Spofford, Moses Carter, and Eben Poore, all of whom took the degreess previous to 1820, and some of whom as early as 1812. Becoming acquainted with this staunch old Irishman, he began to disclose his individuality, and in many ways to convince me that he was a Mason. This was no easy task, as he had forgotten the words and signs communicated to him
when he took upon himself the obligations of the order. One day he came to my house in company with the late Capt. John G. Barnes, a charter member of Chas. C. Dame Lodge, and presented to me a Masonic emblem made with his own hands. It was the square and compasses placed on the top of a rod. It was made of iron.
The old gentlemen described its use in the Lodge, and thereby convinced me that he was a tried and true Mason.
His joy knew no bounds. He was wild with delight. Bro. Barnes took the emblem to Georgetown to the paint shop of Mr. John Bagley, where he worked, and bronzed it over so that it looked very fine. In a few days
it was missing, it could not be found,
and its hiding place is not known to the present day. Bro. Perry was so angry at its loss that he swore vengeance on the head of the man who had stolen it, for it had evidently been stolen. He very soon after made another which was more elaborate and of copper. This piece of copper was purchased in Newburyport by myself, and was about a foot square. It was purchased at Russell's foundry on Merrimac street, and it was not many days before Bro. Perry showed us a very excellent duplicate of the one that was lost, but finished in superior style. It was in my possession a few days and then returned to Bro. Perry for its finishing touches, charging him to guard it carefully that it might not go the way of the former one.

He assured me that it would not go out of his custody until completed, and then he would present it to me as a token of his Masonic love. In less than two weeks it could not be found and its whereabouts was not known for thirty years. Bro. Perry was greatly exercised over the loss, but being an old man and in feeble health, he did not attempt to make another, and died shortly after without ever gazing with admiration upon it within the confines of a Masonic Lodge as he had hoped to do, by the use of this emblem. He, however had a theory of his own as to the disappearance of these jewels, which I have no doubt was correct.

In the early days of immigration to this country, it was the custom of the early comers to find each other out, and visit their friends often, and sometimes at great distances, and even when the person was of no relationship, the fact that they came from Old Ireland, the land made sacred by the heroic lives and sacrificial deaths, as well as the graves of ancestors of which any people might be proud, was enough to carry them a great distance to enjoy a social hour with their countrymen. Bro. Perry, who had married an American woman
and lived in a very comfortable home, invited his countrymen throughout this section, to visit him often. This they did, and sometimes in great numbers, but these family visits never seemed complete to Bro. Perry without a quart or two of alcohol or rum; with this everything went as marriage bell.
The emblems referred to always disappeared at the time of these feasts.
Among the number of guests that were entertained at Bro. Perry's house, was Thos. Shehan, who shared very largely the prejudices of his countrymen against Free Masons. Consequently he would think it no crime to plague his old friend just a little, especially when the fumes of his cup made him particularly happy.

I had not seen or heard from the old jewel for thirty three years, but knew it at sight, and most heartily welcomed
it to the archives of C. C. Dame lodge, where I hope it will remain to tell to future generations how much the old Celt, the village blacksmith of Byfield, loved Masonry.—O. S. Butler in Georgetown Advocate.

Fur Capes—

Garments par-excellence for fall and winter wear; and we wish you all to see the collection of them now shown here. All the popular furs, handsomely shaped, well made and considerably priced. Timely purchases, before the jump in fur prices, helped make them so low.

Three-quarters length garments are the thing this season. We have taken care that no jacket under 28 inches long should be admitted to our present splendid stock.

Misses' garments are handsomer than ever. Krimmer, marten, mink, astrachan and and coney furs are used extensively as trimming on jackets in price from $5 to $25.

Plain blue, tan, gray and black cloth jackets for girls 4 to 16 years old, $2.50 to 20.

For Saturday, a smallish lot of odd sizes of ladies' 5-dollar cloth-surface rubber Newmarkets, to be sold at $2.50 each.

Second floor, front.

There is no reason why a dress at 25, 37 1-2 or 50 cents a yard should not have a style and beauty approaching the costlier goods. In our immense assortment of popular price cloths there are close copies of the rarest patterns—exclusive. See the window show.

Rear of Main store.

The shoe for any weather, particularly the cold and wet we are anticipating, is that with the Hygienic felt inner-sole—for man woman or child. It is a new thing, but the sale is rapid already and the principle is right.

There is nothing, (unless it be the Sewing Machine) that has lightened woman's labor as much as Dobbins' Electric Soap, constantly sold, since 1869. Now, why rub and toil, and wear out yourself and your clothes, on washday, when this perfect soap is provided, to lighten your labor, and save your clothes? If you have ever used it, in the 22 years we have made and sold it, you know that it is the best, purest, and most economical soap made. If you haven't tried it, ask your grocer for it now. Be sure and get the genuine, with our name on the wrapper.

It is not the selling price alone, that must be considered, in arriving at a knowledge of the value of an article. There is as much real pure soap in a bar of Dobbins' Electric as in four bars of any other soap made, and it will, if used according to directions, do four times as much work as any other. Its cost is but a very slight advance on that of inferior soap. Insist upon Dobbins' Electric.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.TREMONT THEATRE.

Rudolph Aronson's Opera company are presenting the great melodramatic success, the opera "Cavalcade Rusticana." The story is taken from a book of tales by Giovanni Verga. Turiddu, a young Sicilian, before leaving his native village to serve his allotted time as a soldier, has for a sweetheart, Lola, a pretty and heartless flirt. In his absence she marries Alfio, a teamster. Turiddu, on his return, seeks consolation in the love of Santuzza, a poor peasant girl. Lola, jealous of her new rival, draws Turiddu once more into her power, so that he tires of Santuzza and refuses to marry her. Goaded to frenzy, Santuzza opens Alfio's eyes to Lola's faithlessness. He meets Turiddu in the public square coming from Mass on Easter morning; embraces him, biting the tip of his right ear, according to the Sicilian fashion of challenging an enemy to mortal combat, and in their subsequent encounter Turiddu is slain. The after piece—"Indigo"—is rendered in good shape, but it approaches too nearly to the range of a minstrel show to please the cultured taste.

The Philharmonic Orchestra (60 musicians) — Mr. Bernhard Listemann, Conductor—will be at the Tremont Theatre Thursday afternoons, Nov. 5-19, Dec. 10-31, Jan. 14-28, Feb. 18, March 3. Season tickets, $7.50 and $5, at Mr. Parkyn's office, 178 Tremont St.

COLUMBIA THEATRE.

This magnificent new theatre, located at 978 Washington St., Boston, and which was inaugurated a week ago last Monday night with brilliant success, will prove a more convenient playhouse for theatre-goers in the southern suburbs, inasmuch as they can reach it fifteen minutes earlier than any other Boston theatre, thus saving a half hour's time, which is a decided boon when long rides by electric or horse cars are considered. The Columbia has been extolled as the handsomest theatre in Boston. The auditorium is a model of beauty and comfort, the decorations, draperies, seats, etc., being of the most elegant and inviting description. The plan of the building such that there is not a poor seat in the house, the line of vision to the stage being perfect from all points, while the acoustic properties are so admirable that a whisper on the stage can be distinctly heard in the last rows of the auditorium. The company which inaugurated this beautiful theatre, Mr. Charles Frohman's from New York, is a remarkably powerful stock organization, on the same style of excellence as those maintained by Augustin Daly and the Lyceum Theatre. Its performance is a marvellous illustration of fine ensemble acting, perfect in every detail and thoroughly harmonious in its entirety. No stronger band of players has ever appeared in Boston. The play which they are presenting, "Men and Women," is the latest and greatest success of De Mille and Belasco, authors of "The Wife," "The Charity Ball," and "Lord Chumley," pieces which have won wide popularity. It ran in New York City for over 250 nights, and is given at the Columbia Theatre with sumptuous scenery and accessories. In addition to the evening performances there are Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

The weather that prevailed through the month of September was the most remarkable that has characterized that month for many years. The "oldest inhabitant" and the records can find no parallel. The first week, ending with Labor Day, was somewhat stormy, the last three days or that time giving us a deluge of water. Tuesday, the eight was a splendid day, and we have continued to have them in succession since. When the time came for the "equinoctial" there were one or two days when it looked as though it might storm but the clouds have been dispelled and the larger part of every day since Labor Day has been beautiful—nearly all of them most beautiful.

The temperature has been as remarkable as the state of the weather. August as a general thing, is cold, with considerable rain at its close, and some of the crops, notably corn and potatoes, were retarded in their growth, and the latter threatened with destruction by rot. The warm, dry spell since has been of great assistance in maturing these crops and now all danger from that direction is passed. As is the case many times in this world when one branch of affairs is suited and prospered by a condition, another is languishing on that very account. So it has been with the dry and pleasant month of September. In many cases there is a scarcity of water, the wells drying up the pastures are burned by the heat of the sun, and this has in turn affected cows, making milk in some localities very scarce, and causing a rise in prices. The streams in many parts of New England are dry and the mills that are dependent upon them for power have forced to shut down or have recourse to steam.—Lynn Transcript

Diet of Locust.

A correspondent of the London Daily Graphic, writing upon the locust plague in North Africa, says: "In reference to the diet of St. John the Baptist, who lived on locust and wild honey in the wilderness there are Sunday school teachers who cannot believe that any one would voluntarily live on such food and therefore, say the 'locust bean' the fruit of the carab tree, is meant by the writers of the New Testament. I can only reply that the locust cricket, the acridum pelerum, order orthoptera, variety saltatoria—the flying sauterelle of Africa—is sold at a half-penny per pound in the market place of Biskra (which is the second oasis from the north in the Sahara), and that there it is cooked by boiling with salt and water, as shrimps are boiled here. I myself have little doubt that it is more nutritious than the latter, because in March, when the insect is gathered and dried, it is as full of albumen as an egg."

Footprints of the World's History.

Ben Franklin once made the statement, "Schools teach us the rudiments of language, but books teach us how to think; therefore, no man is truly educated unless he is a reader of books." Ben was right, but he lived in an age when books were so scarce, comparatively speaking, that but little of the pernicious in literature was tolerated. But in these days it is different. Your boys thirst for a knowledge of the world, and if you don't give them some wholesome reading to stoke that thirst, they will get hold of cheap, sensational stories that will poison their minds and do them terrible injury.

There is such a vast amount of this trashy stuff being poured into the market at the present time, that it is a relief to pick up a new book that is at once thrilling, romantic, wholesome, pure and true.

Such a work is "Footprints of the World's History," the latest and greatest work of the two celebrated historians, John Clark Ridpath and Wm. S. Bryan. These distinguished gentlemen, having won their laurels by independent writings, have co-operated on this work, and produced a gem "of the purest ray serene." It is not dry, uninteresting statements of the plain facts, but rather each of the most important events of history has been taken up and described by a master of language, who holds the reader entranced as he winds his way along the path of history, following carefully in the footprints of progress.

We are delighted with this superb volume. Perfect in thought, superb in style, and magnificent in execution.

It is a valuable addition to literature. It is a book for the old as well as the young; the married as well as the single; the gay as well as the grave. Everybody will read it with equal eagerness and profit. See advertisement on 5th page.

REPUBLICAN RALLY.

Gen. Cogswell, Michael J. Murray and Capt. J. G. B. Adams Address the Meeting.

The Opera House was well filled on Tuesday evening with an orderly but enthusiastic audience, to listen to the rallying speeches of the evening.

Ex-Governor Long, and Representative Greenhalge of Lowell were on the bill, but not, unfortunately, on the boards, and their places were filled as well as the committee were able to fill them.

The Tippecanoe Rifles turned out fifty men commanded by Senior Capt. Benjamin Beckett, Jr., and to the music of the Eighth Regiment Band, marched down Main street, counter-marching at Poole's Hollow and proceeded up Lowell street to the residence of Hon. B. F. Southwick, where the speaker's were received and escorted to the hall.

About 8 o'clock, Senator Southwick who presided, stepped forward and extended a welcome to all present, whether Democrats, Prohibitionists, members of the new party or Republicans. Most of us have come here as Republicans. We believe in the Grand Old Party. We believe it has done good work in the past. Most of us believe in the Republican party for today for it is the party that guarantees protection to industries, protection to American labor, because it will do more for the good of this country than any other party. Today there are 290 cities and towns where there are no public bars because of the work of the Republican party. But we come together to ratify the nominations made at Boston, and if I name those nominees, Pillsbury, Marden and Kimball, where is the man who will not agree that they are good ones, and as to Col. Charles H. Allen, he is a Republican, but not only that, he is a good man. You all know that with a full vote the Republican party is sure to win, for this is a Republican State.

The speaker closed with a tribute to President Harrison and Lieutenant Governor Haile.

General Cogswell was then introduced.

Three rousing cheers were given the General as he stepped forward. The speaker said: I am glad of the opportunity of speaking to you this evening, but conscious as I am of the eloquence of the speakers which are to follow me I must be comparatively brief. This is probably the last opportunity I shall have to address you before we shall sever our connections in the Congressional District for the legislative bill enacted last winter, you have been assigned to another District. I want to thank the Republicans of Peabody for the favors shown me by their suffrage in the past, and I thank my Democratic opponents for the fairness with which you have always treated me. Although the time of election has come and gone, I shall continue to serve you in the future as in the past. You may be represented in the future by able men, perhaps, but no man will be called to represent you who will serve you with more single hearted purpose than I have endeavored to do.

I shall discuss briefly this evening the issue of the state campaign. Both parties are in the field with their platforms and principles to discuss without passion or vituperation, intelligently and fairly, to which ticket and set of principles Massachusetts shall give her support in the election which shall take place on the 3d day of November next, and thereby throw the great weight of her example and moral influence into the contest of '92, which is to determine the financial, the economic, the foreign and domestic policies of our nation, for the four years beginning on the fourth of March, 1893.

In this election, each candidate for Governor, is well fitted to represent his respective party. I do not think the administration of the present Governor is involved. If it has been especially good, as is claimed by his friends, it is as fairly attributable to his Republican council as to himself.

I see no evidence that it has been bad, and what it would have been, uninfluenced and unchecked by a Republican council, no man knows.

I regret exceedingly that, blinded by party zeal and for party purposes, he saw fit, as Governor-elect, to disparage and depreciate in public speech, in another State, the material condition of the ancient and prosperous Commonwealth, which had just crowned him with her highest honors.

If what he said was true, it came with ill grace from his lips, and as it was not true, it showed his willingness, for the sake of his party, to sacrifice the fair name of the Commonwealth which had given him his birth and education.

But I am free to say that I think he regrets it as much as any one, if I am to judge by his speech the other night at Music Hall.

But true repentance will not object to a period of probation, and I think we had better let him retire on probation in January next.

That Governor Brackett had served but one year, and served honorably and well, was argument to the other side, that he should be re-elected. It is a poor rule that won't work both ways.

The Republican candidate for Governor is a gentleman I have known for many years.

To my mind he grandly represents the traditions, the aspirations, the progressive and enlightened principles of the Republican party. Of equal ability with his opponent, of larger experience in public affairs, in touch with the people, liked best where he is known most, I believe he is worthy to join the long line of the illustrious Governors of Massachusetts, and I believe he will.

But, my fellow citizens, this is not in any sense, a choice of men. Our Bill of Rights, declaring the principles of the body politic, ends with these words, "To the end it may be a government of laws and not of men." The government of this country is a government of party and not of men.

If we desire the policies, the methods, the principles of the Democratic party, to prevail in this State, and thereby have Massachusetts throw her enormous moral influence into the scale for Democracy in 1892, there is but one ticket to vote.

If on the other hand, we desire to sustain the policies, the methods, the principles of the Republican party, and have Massachusetts stand firmly and solidly, in the line of Republicanism, as I firmly believe New York, Ohio and Iowa will do this fall; there is but one thing to do in this election and that is, to vote the Republican ticket from "stem to stern."

There is no disguising the fact that the election in Massachusetts and the elections in other states holding elections this fall, are the preliminary battles of the Presidential contest in '92.

The present Governor, after his election last fall, said this: "No greater mistake can be made than to suppose the victory in Massachusetts to be accidental or personal to any man; it was her mature judgment on the tariff after most thorough consideration."

Here we are on the eve of a Presidential campaign, and if Massachusetts reaffirms her action of last fall, can any one doubt that it will be taken everywhere as indicating her position in that campaign?

Mr. Chairman, Massachusetts is small in territory, her Presidential votes are but 14 out of some 400, but she is still the Grand Old Commonwealth and the leader among the States of this Union.

Whatever she does in a political sense, gives inspiration and vast encouragement to one or the other of the great political parties of the country.

The great and growing West may look upon her as small in numbers, but it knows that as stands Massachusetts to her colors and tradition, so will largely be determined in the future the financial policy of this nation.

The South may speak of her as it may, but it also knows that if the Old Bay State shall speak this fall with her former vigor and certainty, the fight will be kept up in this country until it is settled, that everywhere under the flag the ballot shall be voted without fear and counted without favor.

What are the policies of the Democratic party? The answer to the question in the first instance depends upon where you are when you ask the question.

In Massachusetts, possibly in New York, its financial policy is claimed to be, for a dollar worth a hundred cents, in the rest of the country it is for a dollar worth seventy cents.

In the last Congress, every Democratic Senator, with possibly two exceptions, voted for free and unlimited coinage of silver. Every Democratic Representative, with possibly a dozen exceptions, voted the same way. And the financial world today knows that nothing stands in the way of free and unlimited coinage of silver for this country but the veto of a Republican President.

"One swallow does not make a summer," any more than eight Republican Senators constitute the Republican party, or a dozen Democrats control the legislation of the great Democratic party.

But when I find the Democratic party in Congress, voting, almost solid,

in favor of free coinage, and the Republican party voting almost solid, against it, I cannot help getting the impression that the Democratic party is for free and unlimited coinage of silver, even if Massachusetts Democrats do resolve that they do "Believe in honest money, the gold and silver coinage of the constitution," whatever that may mean.

Against the great Democratic tide, that resolution will be like Mrs. Partington's broom in sweeping back the sea.

Not long since that staunch organ of Southern Democracy, The Richmond Dispatch, said as follows: "For such a State as Massachusetts to be talking about what her Democracy is and what her Democracy believe in is, we suppose we must say, amusing. Massachusetts has not chosen a Democratic Presidential elector during the last fifty years. Gov. Russell of Massachusetts is vastly mistaken if he supposes that he knows in regard to the currency question, aught which is not known by the Democrats of Ohio and Virginia."

These latter advocate intelligently the free coinage of silver. They are following a gad-o'-the-tandem, nor being misled by mere theorists.

Now, what is Free and Unlimited Coinage of Silver? It means to give to the owners of silver bullion and silver mines the right to take an ounce of silver, now worth in the market only ninety-eight cents, to the United States mint and have it coined into $1.29.

Or in other words, seventy cents worth of silver coined into a dollar.

Under free coinage of silver, a silver king could take silver bullion valued at $70.79 to the mint and obtain for it one hundred silver dollars or silver certificates; this would be full legal tender in payment of debts and obligations

Small Fresh Fish Baked in a Crust.

BY MRS. D. A. LINCOLN,
Author Boston Cook Book.

Use small fresh fish, like trout, scup, perch, etc. Clean them and wipe dry. Cut gashes one inch apart through the thick flesh on each side. Sprinkle well with salt and pepper. Make a rich crust, with 1 quart flour, into which mix thoroughly 4 level tea sp. Cleveland's baking powder and 1 tea sp. salt. Moisten with thin cream sufficient to make a dough to roll out. Divide into two parts, and roll each part 1/4 inch thick. Lay the fish on one part, leaving two inches space between each fish. Put the other half of the crust over. Cut through the crusts around each fish; pinch the edges together tightly, and lay them some distance apart on a baking tin. Bake about 1/2 hour. Serve with egg sauce. Cook 1 tea sp. minced onion and 2 table sp. flour in 2 table sp. hot butter, add gradually 1 pint hot milk. Stir as it thickens, and season with 1 tea sp. salt, 1 salt sp. white pepper and 1 table sp. lemon juice. Add the chopped whites of three hard boiled eggs, and the yolks mashed and sifted, and serve very hot. (Copyright, 1891, by Cleveland Baking Powder Co.)

Use only Cleveland's baking powder, the proportions are made for that.

Cleveland's Baking Powder is wholesome, leavens most, and leavens best. Try it.

CHAPTER I.

Derwent sat down on a stone bench and looked about him with a sense of satisfaction akin to delight. And it was indeed a delightful place into which he had wandered—a place of broad avenues, shaded by immense trees, dividing pleasantries full of the most enchanting greenness, where feathery shrubs and banks of emerald sward, hedges of geranium and rose, and masses of white gladioli, with wide green leaves and Nile, golden hearted chandeliers of bloom, were all sparkling with diamond drops from the water lately and lavishly showered upon them. The avenues, clean swept as a palace floor, were also damp from the spray that had fallen over them, and their leaf shaded vistas led from all directions to circular spaces, where fountains played in the midst of great basins, or groups of statues stood on pedestals of green grass sown with daisies. Overhead was a sky of sapphire, cloudless and exquisite, from which the sun poured golden light, but with the light no heat—only such balmy warmth as may have reigned in the garden of Paradise; while the atmosphere was crisp, clear, stimulating, and full of a charm as impossible to describe as the aroma of a rose.

"What a beautiful woman!" he said. "Who is she?"

Derwent's mantic interest and wonderful beauty. Something of all this seemed to Derwent expressed in the scene before him, in the tropical loveliness of the beautiful pleasure ground and in the Old World grace and solidity of every object fashioned by the hand of man. From the stone bench on which he sat, with its high back and sculptured ends, that might have been taken from a classic picture, to the noble towers of the two great churches that look at each other across the Plaza de Morelos and of which he had a glimpse through one of the leafy avenues, all was suggestive of Europe in the days when craftsmen were artists, when men wrought with a beauty and a skill that the world of today can only feebly copy, and builded not only for themselves but for the generations that were to follow them. Yet to fancy himself even for a moment in a European city was impossible. If the Spaniard planted deep in the land of the Aztec his art, his laws, his language and his faith, he left—unlike other conquerors of whom we know—the race to whom God had given it, and today in the city of Cortez the young stranger had seen Aztec faces filling the churches, the streets and the market places, and forms so purely Indian that they might have met the conquistadores passing down the beautiful avenues and loitering around the shaded fountains of the Alameda.

There was to him so much interest in the striking contrasts of the scene—in the close juxtaposition of a brilliant civilization with the most primitive types of human life—that he let his thoughts wander far back into the history of this fascinating land, while a succession of fascinating figures came down the shaded vistas, passed around the great basin of the fountain that occupied the center of the circle where he sat and disappeared in some one of the radiating walks. Now it was a young man who looked as if he might have stepped from the pavement of Pall Mall, then a sandaled peon in wide cotton trousers, gayly striped blanket and straw sombrero; next a gentleman with Spanish dignity in every line of face and figure; presently a group of Mexican ladies, silken clad, lace draped, on their way to mass, with ivory prayer books and silver rosaries in their hands; a dark faced woman with a baby wrapped in the close folds of her blue scarf passed, followed by a pair of prettily dressed American or English girls, with the sunlight gleaming on their golden hair; a group of young officers with clanking swords made with their uniforms a bright effect of color; and a band of lovely children, attended by their Indian nurses, paused where a vendor of dulces had erected his stand and broke into a chatter of sweet Spanish sounds.

This constantly varying procession had been going on for some time, when a tall, broad shouldered young man, with an aspect unmistakably American, advanced in a leisurely manner down one of the avenues, caught sight of the quiet figure in the flickering shadow, and quickened his pace as he approached it.

rather early." He glanced at his watch as he sat down. "Eleven o'clock; not so early as I thought. It will not be long now before all the world will be here."

"A good deal of the world seems to be here at present," said Derwent. "I have been watching for some time the remarkably varied character of the people passing."

"Oh, that can be seen at any time," answered the other. "But Sunday morning after mass the fashionable world has a dress parade in the Alameda. Everybody in Mexico—especially everybody who is anybody—comes here, and it is a very brilliant scene for an hour or two. There goes the first sign of it."

He indicated an Indian, who trotted by with a dozen or two chairs skillfully bound together and arranged in a pyramid on his back. These he conveyed to the chief avenue leading from San Francisco street into the heart of the park, where a woman removed them from his back and placed them in a line on the side of the avenue, putting a narrow strip of carpet before them. Others were engaged in the same manner on the opposite side; and soon two rows of chairs faced each other along the length of the beautiful shaded way.

"For dos reales, you can have your choice of those," said the newcomer, "and find yourself in the society of the elite of Mexico, who naturally prefer paying for their seats to using those which the municipality provides. Moreover, everybody who enters the park comes in by that avenue; so that one has an admirable opportunity for observing and criticizing all one's acquaintances."

"But how if one has none?" said Derwent. "That would lessen the amusement. I prefer my present position because it commands a number of different avenues, and I suppose that the most of those who come here will walk about, else there would be no object in sitting down to look at them."

The other laughed. "You are right," he said. "Everybody walks, for a time at least. Here comes the music; the people will soon follow."

A group of men in uniform, carrying large brass instruments, passed by and mounted in single file the flight of steps leading to one of the picturesque music pavilions erected in different parts of the park. Derwent followed them with his gaze, observing how well the gold braid with which they were profusely decorated gleamed through the green foliage that surrounded the stand.

"Can you tell me how it is, Morell," he said, half absently, "that these people have such an artistic genius, and know just how to give a touch of color and grace to everything they do?"

"If you are in the line of conundrums," replied Morell, "I can give you a better one than that. How is it that these people are so infernally slow in all their transactions that a man who comes here to do any kind of business must pass the best part of his time in waiting on their procrastination? By Jove! I sometimes think that I will throw up everything and leave the country!"

The other looked at him inquiringly. "What is the matter?" he asked. "Has anything annoying occurred?" He knew that the outburst had not been without a purpose.

Morell, who was rolling a cigarette, did not answer until he had placed it between his lips, lighted it behind the flap of the little box of wax tapers which every Mexican carries, and returned the box to his pocket. Then he said, "I have had letters this morning, and there is trouble about that mine."

"What! the one you have offered me?" "The same. The man who offered it to me, and assured me that he had it in his hand, so to speak, now writes that there is trouble with the owners. They are wrangling among themselves; some don't want to sell at all; and so the matter stands."

"Indeed!" said Derwent. He was a little surprised, but quite cool. Partly by temperament, partly by cultivation of habit, he had an imperturbable self possession which seldom failed and often served him in situations where other men lost control of themselves and consequently of events. "In that case," he said, quietly, "I had better think no more about it and take up something else."

"It is the best thing of which I know," said Morell, "and I don't anticipate failure in getting it, but it is the way of the people to make such obstacles and delays. Fernandez says that the matter will come right, but that we must have patience and use a little diplomacy. Confound them! I should like to use something much more forcible!"

Derwent did not reply immediately. He suspected that a little diplomacy was being used for his benefit, although Morell's irritation certainly seemed altogether genuine. But he did not commit himself to any expression of such a suspicion. Time would show, he thought, how the matter stood, and meanwhile he would bear himself cautiously. A burst of music from the band near by filled the air at this moment and made a melodious accompaniment to his thoughts. Presently he said, with the same quietness:

"And for how long a time will this patience and diplomacy be required?" "Who can say?" he answered. "There is no good in trying to force things with these people. They do not understand promptness in business, and when you try to press matters they take your haste for anxiety, and either double their price or hold back all the more. The diplomacy required is a policy of apparent indifference. Fernandez says that he will leave them severely alone for a time, and he believes that those who want to sell will make the others come to terms."

"But anything so indefinite as that does not suit me at all," said Derwent. "When I came here on your representation I thought that you had property which you could put into my hands at once. If you have not, I must seek what I desire elsewhere."

"My dear fellow, you are like all Americans when they come into this country; you expect to be able to do business as it is done in the states. But the first lesson to be learned is that this is impossible. You must be patient if you wish to accomplish anything."

"Patience is a virtue in which I have never found myself deficient—when it was required," said Derwent calmly; "but there are times, as we all know, when it ceases to be a virtue. And one of these times is surely when people who own property do not want to sell it."

"But the fools do want to sell," replied Morell, growing a little excited in manner. "It is only their way of securing, if possible, a higher price."

"Be kind enough, then, to let them know, through your friend Senor Fernandez, that I have no intention of paying more than we have already agreed upon for that mine. If I find it that it has been represented, I will give twenty thousand dollars for it—not a centavo more."

"It is really worth a great deal more, you know," said Morell, in a confidential tone.

"I take it for granted that it is, and I hope to make much more out of it," returned the other coolly. "But that has been their price, and it is the largest amount that I am able to give. If they do not take it I must, as I have said, look elsewhere for an investment. You can surely make this plain enough for even a Mexican to understand. And I shall be glad to know as soon as possible if it is worth while for me to go and look at it or not. That is all."

It was now Morell's turn to be silent, and as he smoked he gave one or two quick glances at the face beside him. It was a face so pleasant that many people were deceived altogether with regard to the character of which it was an index. Only those who knew Geoffrey Derwent well were aware that under the sunny, debonaire charm of his manner and appearance there was a very resolute nature. Obstinate he was not—for obstinacy is always allied with intellectual weakness; but when he had once seen clearly and resolved firmly he acted inflexibly. There were certain lines about his straight nose and well cut mouth which would have made this evident at once to a physiognomist, and which struck Morell now as he glanced at the profile presented to him—a handsome profile that, with the perpendicular brow and firmly rounded chin, would not have looked amiss on a bronze medal. It was only in the profile that this expression was caught. The eyes dominated the face, and Derwent's gray eyes were full of the frank and pleasant good nature with which he regarded all the world unless specially rounded to other sentiments; while one does not often see a more attractive smile than that which now and then made his white teeth gleam under the sweeping brown mustache.

Having uttered his ultimatum, he said nothing more, and indeed the scene before him was now striking enough to engage the attention of any one who saw it for the first time. The beautiful sylvan park had suddenly become a theater on which the fashionable world was displaying itself in full force and with all its gayest plumes. Every seat was filled, all the chairs so carefully arranged along the avenue were occupied, and in every direction was a moving throng of promenaders, while two bands alternately flooded the air with melody. It is impossible to imagine anything more animated than the scene. The long vistas of shade, the masses of green turf and foliage, the sparkling fountains, the statues and great clumps of lilies, made a picturesque background for the figures that passed in well bred throng among them—graceful women in every variety of fashionable toilet, distinguished looking men and fairer children. It was the Champs Elysees transferred to the tropics, with such color as only the tropics can give; while here and there through the brilliant crowd, brushing silken skirts and point lace parasols, came men and women who might have stepped from an aboriginal forest, with their dark faces and lithe, sinewy forms draped in serape or rebozo—some passing with calm unconcern through the elegant throng, others offering here and there the bright hues of which they bore on trays.

"It is the most charming picture I have ever seen!" Derwent declared, as he watched the scene with eyes full of interest, while Morell kept up a running commentary of description concerning the chief personages who passed. Suddenly the young man broke in upon this with a quick exclamation. "What a beautiful woman!" he said. "Who is she?"

There were a number of women in sight, most of them with claims to beauty more or less pronounced, but Morell had no doubt to whom he alluded. Two ladies were passing at the moment, both wearing the charming Spanish costume, which no creation of Worth or Felix can rival in becomingness, and on the younger many eyes besides those of Derwent were fastened. She was indeed a beautiful creature—her beauty being the supreme expression of the type of loveliness peculiar to her country. Soft brunette tints, delicate features and dark eyes had been common enough in the faces that went by, but here was a face that fascinated by a distinction altogether its own. The complexion was like ivory in tint and texture, the features, of exquisite delicacy, had a certain fine nobility of outline which gave a lofty expression to the countenance that was only redeemed from haughtiness by the sweetness of the lovely lips and the softness of the eyes, so large and dark and splendid that they would have sufficed to lift a plain face into beauty. Somewhat above the average height, her figure was molded in faultless lines, and she walked with the unconscious grace which all Mexican women display, and a proud dignity that seemed specially her own. Dressed simply but richly in black, with the lace mantilla draping her beautiful head, she passed among the throng like a stately young queen among her subjects.

"Of course you mean that lovely girl in black," said Morell. "She is the most beautiful woman in Mexico, and one of the richest—Donna Zarifa Ormond y Cardella."

Down Went Derwent!

Assailed from ambush by Mexican bandits, he topples over a precipice, but tumbles into a tree and is rescued by good Samaritans. He lives to vanquish his enemies and capture the sweetest Senorita in all Mexico. A great story is "What! are they all gone?"

"Yes."
"I'm going to try a sort I've been reading about, if I have to send to Pittsburgh for 'em. Macbeth & Co.'s 'pearl-top.' They say their chimneys don't break."
"Another humbug, probably."
"Don't Muggins keep 'em?"
"I'm going to see. Give me a postal card. I'll have that chimney, anyhow."
Muggins got 'em for him, and did a thriving chimney business for several weeks, till everybody got 'em; and somehow his trade has increased all round ever since.

KOCH'S DISCOVERY.

A remedy discovered that is of far greater efficacy than the noted lymph.

The tubercle bacilli were discovered by Prof. Koch, to be constantly present in all cases of consumption. Where the blood is impoverished or impure, there results that constitutional condition known as scrofula, which is characterized by the liability of certain tissues to become the seat of chronic inflammations and enlargements.

These troubles may start as catarrh in the nasal passages, throat or lungs, and as the membranes become weakened, the tubercle bacilli enter, and multiply, and we have, as a result, that dread disease—Consumption.

Find a perfect remedy for scrofula, in all its forms—something that purifies the blood, as well as cures to. That, if it's taken in time, will cure Consumption. It has been found in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

As a strength-restorer, blood-cleanser, and flesh-builder, nothing like it is known to medical science. For Scrofula, Bronchial, Throat, and Lung affections, Weak Lungs, severe Coughs, and kindred ailments, it's the only remedy so sure that it can be guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, your money is refunded.

“But you must agree that the beauty and the fortune are well matched. She looks like a princess, besides being dowered as few princesses are. Be sure the men who hope to marry her would not have the least charm lessened,” he added with a laugh.

“Most of those in sight would differ with you,” said Morell. “Did you ever know a man who thought himself of mold too ordinary for any woman to stoop to? Dona Zarifa has suitors and to spare, and, unless she is very unlike other women, she would not dispense with one of them.”

“Her looks are deceptive if she is not unlike other women,” said Derwent. “I should like to glance into the future and see what she will make of the gifts fortune has showered on her so lavishly—what part she will play in the world; but probably I should only be disappointed if I did.”

“Not a doubt of it,” said Morell. “A man is always disappointed when a woman whom he admires has the bad taste to marry another man. I have heard that Dona Zarifa will probably marry her kinsman, Senor Cardella; that will restore the estates to the family. Now let me suggest that it is time for lunch, and that we had better go and secure a table at the Cafe Anglais or the Concordia before the crowd comes in.”

“Very well,” said Derwent, rising. He was a strangely strung, fastidious being, and the last item of information about the dark eyed princess had taken from him the desire to linger for another glimpse of her.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1891.

UNFORTUNATELY FOR the honor of the nation, Pension Commissioner Raum is reported to be financially ruined by his creditors forcing payment of his private debts.

THE JOINT debate took place in Tremont Temple last night between Henry Cabot Lodge and John E. Russell, and as we supposed would be the case both sides claim the victory.

RUMORS THAT were rife the early part of the week to the effect that Balmaceda was not dead, but had caused reports of suicide to be circulated for the purpose of facilitating his flight, seem now to be forever set at rest by denials of the late rumors and emphatic assertion of the truth of the reports of suicide by persons of such standing as to entitle their utterances to general belief.

THE LIBRARIAN of Salem public library issued inquiries to a number of librarians in various parts of the country regarding means of preventing spread of contagious disease by circulation of books and among the replies was one from Chicago, where it was recommended that the Health Department co-operate with the library in disinfecting books during epidemics.

If books must be circulated at such periods the suggestion seems a very good one; but in times of extraordinary danger it would seem wiser to discontinue the distribution temporarily.

SEVERAL CASES against the Manhattan Elevated Railway Company in which heavy damages were awarded by the New York Court of Common Pleas, for obstruction of Light and air and subsequent loss of rent in buildings along the route, have been reversed by the Court of Appeals at Albany this week. One of the principal points established by the reversal is that the court on appeal has the right to review the question whether the full damage has been fixed by competent testimony, and that mere opinions of experts to the effect that property would be worth more if the railroad were not in the street are incompetent to establish the measure of damages.

New trials will be necessitated by the decree, but up to date the railway company stands victorious.

The Suburban Rapid Transit Company also scored a victory in the same tribunal and is thus permitted to enter St. Mary's Park.

The Essex South Conference of churches met with the South church, Peabody, Wednesday, Oct. 21. About 450 were present. The first service was the observance of the communion, administered by Rev. Mr. Bradstreet of Topsfield and Rev. Mr. Gleason of West Gloucester. Rev. Mr. Hibbard of Gloucester was chosen moderator, and offered prayer. The scribe of the conference, Rev. Frank T. Waters of Ipswich, read the minutes of the last meeting. Rev. Mr. Buckham of Salem was chosen assistant scribe. Committees on place of next meeting and nomination were appointed. Since the last meeting of the Conference, the church in South Peabody has become a distinct church instead of a branch from South Peabody, and requested to be received into fellowship with the conference. Rev. Frank H. Reed of Lanesville, Gloucester, opened a discussion on "Latent Forces in our Churches." He recommended asking members to do some special service—some definite work. Get the young men to help lead a special Sunday evening service. He was followed by Rev. Daniel Marvin of Manchester. He said we must use the prayer meeting and make it a power. We must put our Bible truths into modern thought. Let there be visiting from house to house. Let Christians use themselves as conservatories conserving the truth. Let them be also exponents of the truth. Mr. John F. Pitman alluded to the rescue mission work they are about inaugurating in Salem. What we want is, to pray God for the descent of the Holy Spirit. He believed the Christian Endeavor movement was developing latent forces and bringing the young to the front. Rev. Mr. Strong of Beverly believed in particularizing the work to be done and the people to do it. Rev. Mr. Clark of Salem said our churches are not doing the evangelistic work they ought to do.

A glimpse at the London Council by Rev. Sherrod Soule was very interesting. How did the Council come about? The suggestion came from Australia and was endorsed by England. There were 300 delegates, 100 from America, 100 from South Britain and 100 from Scotland and other places. For eight continuous days they heard from ten to twenty speakers a day. It was not a council to settle doctrinal belief. It was to consider Congregationalism, domestic, in all countries and as related to the world. There is more toleration in English Congregationalists than elsewhere. An English audience is responsive to what seems to them good. The way they sing is wonderful. We have not begun to know what congregational singing is. He was impressed with the unity and strength of Congregationalism. Doctrinal differences seem less to them in England than here. They are more conservative in methods than we are, but not so in thought.

After a simple lunch served by the South church, the afternoon session was resumed. Reports of committees were given and the right hand of fellowship extended to two gentlemen from West Peabody, welcoming that church to the Conference.

Dr. A. J. Gordon of Boston gave a stimulating, healthful talk upon evangelistic work in our churches. He said if a church was not evangelistic, it would cease to be evangelical. We must have a clear apprehension of what the Gospel can do. Fifteen years ago he first saw what the Gospel can do for the drunkard. A man in his church was converted while intoxicated. He has twenty-eight converted drunkards in the membership of his church. He has opened a home to receive them and get them work. At a meeting held in Valparaiso, five men bore testimony to having been converted in that industrial temporary home in Boston. God is bound to stand by his own work. We must fill ourselves so full of the life of heaven, get so high up that we can go low down and not be contaminated. Then there are the Jews to work among. There are 30,000 of them in Boston. He has four in his church. They have to stand the most terrible persecution, but they make magnificent Christians. Then there are the Chinese. He has twenty Chinese in his church. They are thrifty, industrious, honest. They are aggressive Christians, supporting four native missionaries in China. They are wonderful people when converted. Then the Italians must not be neglected. He has sent out from his Biblical training school six missionaries to foreign fields. One who was sent as a servant to a missionary had 3000 converted under him in three months. The closing address was by Rev. W. G. Pufferfoot, who presented the dark and bright side of the Home Missionary Society in his own thrilling manner, touching the hearts of all present.

After passing the usual resolution of thanks the conference adjourned. The place of the next meeting was left with the standing committee.

ESSEX COUNTY.

Two boys tipped over a small boat just above the bridge at Newburyport on Saturday. Both boys escaped with only a wetting.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Lawrence Board of Trade, it was decided to have a book issued in 1895, the fiftieth anniversary of the city, setting forth the advantages of Lawrence as a manufacturing place.

Lawrence people have made efforts to have the Grand Army county parade in that city next year, and it is probable the same will be held there.

H. A. Buell a Lawrence grocer closed his store last week and took his 21 clerks to the Food and Health Exposition at Boston.

The Oratorio Society rehearsals commenced Nov. 5 with the sublime composition "The Messiah," one of the grandest oratorios ever written.

The executive committee on the Salem High School alumni is busily engaged in arranging for the annual reunion in Hamilton Hall, to be held at Thanksgiving time. This is the 25th anniversary of the organization, and the committee will lay out a special programme for the occasion.

Beverly is to have next year a new brick depot 150 feet long, with a waiting room 40 by 40 feet and a woman's room 20 by 29 feet.

Lynn shipped last week 7261 cases of boots and shoes; Haverhill, 4426; Beverly, 1591.

George H. Hoyt and F. L. Potter of Lawrence have mortgaged to the People's Five Year Benefit Order, for $25,000, a building and lot of land on the corner of River and Villa streets, Haverhill.

The field, staff, and line officers of the Eighth Regiment have accepted the invitation of Post 34, G. A. R., to attend the fair in Cadet Hall, Nov. 11, in full uniform. The annual officers' supper will be held in Boston, next month.

Horace Jackson of Lynn, convicted of abortion, was sentenced in the Superior Court at Lawrence Monday to State Prison for eight years. Charles H. Willard, the Salem Jail breaker, who murderously assaulted Jailor Beaver and took French leave 11 years ago.

The Andover Home.

A meeting was held at the Union Congregational Church, Andover, for the purpose of organizing the Andover Home Association. The purpose of the association is the moral and social improvement of working people. It is proposed to have a building which may be located, possibly, on Harrison avenue, at the South End. Among those present were Rev. Nehemiah Boyton, Prof. George Harris, Rev. B. F. Hamilton, Rev. E. S. Teal, Rev. Charles W. Huntington of Lowell, and representatives from Taunton, Lowell and other places.

The institution is to be conducted after the plan of Toynbee Hall, a very successful London charity building. It will be unsectarian.

The Leather Trade.

Sales are about equal to receipts. Stocks do not accumulate, and prices are steady without improvement. Local buyers, with some outsiders, bought fairly of light rough oak leather at current rates.

Orders are scarce for city finished harness. Country finish in medium and heavy weights sells in small lots. There is but little demand for low grade light leather of which there is a fair stock on hand.

Foreign orders for calf kid keep manufacturers fairly busy.

There is rather an active demand for domestic calfskins in weights from 25 to 46 lbs., at current rates.

There have been rather large lots of morocco shipped lately, chiefly to New England States. New York State, and the Western States are not large buyers at present. An average business is being done for this time of year. Alum and mixed tannages of glazed kid are fairly salable and the output of "chrome" is increasing. Experimental lots are still on the market and can be purchased at prices to suit those making shoes at popular prices.

Oak butts, backs and bellies are in good regular demand at quotations.

Texas oak sole is well sold up, and orders wait for certain selections from the tanneries. Good regular leather brings quoted rates, while leather off color or otherwise faulty is shaded in price.

Hemlock sole is in fair demand.

Pebbles sell about as rapidly as produced, but the demand is somewhat less than it has been of late.—Shoe and Leather Review.

Shoe Trade Across the Water.

Mr. W. L. Terhune, publisher of the Boston Boot and Shoe Recorder, is now in Europe gathering material for a series of illustrated articles on "How Europe is Shod," which commenced in the Recorder, Oct. 21, and continues for several weeks. Mr. Terhune's story will embrace both manufacturing and retailing as it is done in England, Ireland, Scotland, Germany, France, Holland, Belgium and Switzerland.

These articles, in connection with a series of articles on advertising now running in the Recorder, will make interesting and instructive reading.

Harvard Students.

There are 2613 students enrolled in Harvard University for the years 1891-92. This is a net increase of 361 over last year, and it shows that Harvard's growth during the last 12 months has been unprecedentedly large. The gain of the year 1890-91 over the previous year was only 193. The increase in the present year, is therefore, nearly double that of the year before. In two cases there is a slight loss—in the senior class and in the divinity school, which latter will doubtless receive recruits from the men who always enter the divinity school late.—Newburyport Herald.

Must Pay Letter Rates.

By a recent decision of the post-office department, such mail matter as bank notices, school reports, tax returns, abstracts of title, assessment notices, price lists and other like forms of communications, made out partly in writing on printed blanks, must pay letter rates, viz., 2 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof. The only deviation from the strict letter of the rule is in the case of a printed circular, to which the law allows a written date, address and signature to be put; but it does not admit of the insertion, in the body of circular, of any written names, figures or other characters. The above decision will interest many organizations and societies sending assessment notices.

Salem's Water Rates.

The committee on water works gave a further hearing on Friday evening on the subject of water rates, and Messrs. Welch, Taddell, Lyon, Gauss, Goodell, Quinn and Fabens were among those who addressed the committee. A rise in the rates is not popular, even with those who advocate costly projects that require money.—Salem Register.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

On Monday evening next, October 26, the Tremont Theatre will be the scene of the first presentation in this city of a comedy, the record of which is probably unexampled in the late history of the drama; that is, after having been heard in New York at the Madison Square Theatre, in Chicago, Philadelphia, and at least a half dozen other large cities, it has yet to receive its first adverse criticism of any moment. This, too, is a comedy written by a woman, and it has the virility of the best comedy work of this age and the historical past; wit and finesse of a most brilliant order, and it tells a story which reaches right home to the hearts of every one. Columns of commendation from the pens of the best writers of the day could be quoted. The difficulty is only in selection what to quote among so much laudation. Here are a few of myriad lines of praise however.

"She has an excellent wit. Her play is most enjoyable in its moments of persiflage. She makes young people love and quarrel, kiss and pout, with charming ingenuousness and refreshing naturalness. In short, a brisker female writer of comedy has not come into public view within reasonable memory."—New York Sun.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

Frederick Paulding, for several seasons a leading member of the Jefferson-Florence combination, and an actor of sterling worth and ability, will be seen at the Grand Opera House next week in an elaborate and costly production of a comedy-drama typical of New York city experience called "The Struggle for Life." The play is in six acts and ten scenes, and shows a number of familiar localities in the metropolis. It has been running in New York at the Standard Theatre to a succession of crowded houses, the entire press of that city pronouncing it the greatest scenic production ever put upon the stage. The chief sets are a drawing room in a Murray Hill mansion, the Battery in Winter, with a view of the harbor and the statue of Liberty by moonlight, St. Patrick's Cathedral on Fifth Avenue, a private parlor in the Astor House, the corner of Water and Clinton Streets, a cellar on the river front, the City Hall Park, the river and shipping during a snow storm. The view of Fifth Avenue showing St. Patrick's Cathedral, the Duncan, residence, and the Langham Hotel, is pronounced a marvel of beauty, the effect being heightened by the organ peals which accompany the supposed service going on within the walls of the edifice, but the crowning triumph of the production is said to be in the great dock and sewer scene which has never before been produced on any stage, and which is voted beyond all comparison the most complete and marvelous bit of stage realism and mechanism seen in this generation. It is an exact and accurate view of a point on the East River near Water street. It shows the mouth of the great sewer—there being a double stage town—where the hero is borne into the river, with all the massive shipping and water-front surroundings giving an effect so natural as to elicit round about round of applause when it is revealed.

In the massive and realistic St. Patrick's Cathedral scene Gounod's "Jerusalem" and Adams' "Cantique de Noel" will be sung by a noted soloist, assisted by a chorus of twenty voices and a grand organ, at which Prof. Berge will preside. The play is to be produced under the supervision of Fred Williams, of the Lyceum Theatre, New York, by kind permission of Manager Daniel Froham. All the incidental music, an overture, and three original songs—"The Jolly Tars," "The Feet of the Tenement," and "The Shoe Brigade" were written by Mr. Jesse Williams, the well-known orchestra leader, from the New York leader, from the New York Casino. Altogether "The Struggle for Life" will be certain to attract large audiences to the Grand Opera House next week.

As the sun is superior to the stars, so DANA'S is superior to all other Sarsaparillas.

Be Sure

If you have made up your mind to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to take any other. A Boston lady, whose example is worthy imitation, tells her experience below:

"In one store where I went to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla the clerk tried to induce me to buy their own instead of Hood's; he told me their's would last longer; that I might take it on ten days' trial; that if I did not like it I need not pay anything, etc. But he could not prevail on me to change. I told him I had taken Hood's Sarsaparilla, knew what it was, was satisfied with it, and did not want any other. When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was feeling real miserable with dyspepsia, and so weak that at times I could hardly stand. I looked like a person in consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me so much good that I wonder at myself sometimes, and my friends frequently speak of it." Mrs. ELLA A. GOFF, 61 Terrace Street, Boston.

Wedding Bells.

Thursday evening, at 7 o'clock a home wedding occurred at the residence of D. B. Lord on Andover street, the host's youngest daughter Margaret Searl Lord was united in matrimony to Mr. Elmer Merton Poor, son of Town Clerk Nathan H. Poor.

The sacred vows were sealed with a beautiful ring by Rev. J. W. Hudson, beneath a beautiful floral horse-shoe in a room handsomely decorated for the occasion with palms and flowers.

The guests who were all near relatives of the contracting parties numbered about fifty.

The bride was attired in a gown of white India silk and looked as charming as heart could wish.

The ceremony was followed by a lunch served by McGrillis & Co of Salem and at 9 o'clock, the bridal party departed amid showers of rice.

They will spend a short time in New Jersey and New York and upon their return will occupy the new house 32 Franklin street.

The A. O. U. W.

George Peabody Lodge, No. 18, Ancient Order of United Workmen, gave an entertainment in Peabody Institute, Thursday evening, followed by a supper to which about 150 people, both in and out of the order, sat down in British American Hall.

Past Grand Master Barnes, the eloquent exponent of the order from San Francisco, delivered an address as a part of the programme at the Institute, in which he set forth the advantages of the order in a pleasing manner, interspersed with illustrative stories that kept the audience in good humor, and when after speaking an hour and a half he made his retiring bow, all present were anxious for more of his light and eloquence.

Mr. Barnes told his hearers that in 1877 when it was proposed to establish the order on the Pacific slope and he was requested to give his opinion on the feasibility of the plan, he spent much time in looking up the mortality tables of life insurance companies and ascertaining the annual death rate of such societies as the Masons, Odd Fellows, Druids, Pythians and kindred fraternities, going back over a period of half a century or more and found that the average death rate was one per cent per annum of the total membership in all the societies investigated. He found also that the actual cost to life insurance companies of carrying $1000 on a man's life was about seven dollars a year. He was more than convinced of the finability of the plan of the A. O. U. W., and upon his judgment the order was planted on the Pacific coast, where it has grown almost as large as the big red wood trees. Winter before last he said the California jurisdiction after paying all the assessments that could legally be levied on members of that jurisdiction—$25 in one year for their $2000 insurance, they wanted $90,000 to pay for deaths caused by a terrible plague and had not a cent to pay with. Then he said the life companies told him his order was wrecked, but he said wait a few days and see whether we have a "reserve fund." The plan of the order is to set off in various districts separate jurisdictions which take care of their own members until they have been obliged in extraordinary emergencies to pay a limited number of assessments, and then any deficiency is made good by the order at large. California notified the different lodges all over the continent and required them to pay ten cents per capita according to law, and within thirty days, the $90,000 was all paid off and he had the laugh on the corporations that had been looking for complete shipwreck.

He reviewed the history of the order, dating back to 1867, and traced its growth to the present day when it numbers 263,000 members and pays out annually about $500,000,000, at a cost in Massachusetts of about eleven dollars per annum.

About 0.45 a line was formed and 150 of those present marched to the banquet hall, where McGrillis & Co. served a fine spread. After satiating the palates, addresses were made by Mr. E. W. Morrison of the local lodge, William Leonard, Esq., P. M. W., Joseph Symonds, M. W., and other Shist masters of Salem lodges, Deputy latve Symonds and Mr. Barnes. The paper also rendered some vocal selections that took the guests by storm. Some fine recitations were given also by Mrs. W. H. Jaques of this town.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the deceased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed condition you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed. Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free. F. J. CHENEY, & CO., Toledo, O. Sold by druggists, 75 cts.

Democratic Rally.

A grand Democratic rally was held in Town Hall last evening. The voters formed at Temperance Hall and accompanied by the Lafayette Band, after a short parade around town, marched to the residence of ex-Representative S. S. Littlefield, where the speakers were entertained and escorted to town hall. The hall was filled with a large and enthusiastic audience. Mr. Littlefield acted as President of the meeting and urged upon all voters the necessity of getting out a full vote on election day. The first speaker introduced was Frank H. Pope of Leominster, who spoke briefly on State Issues and the tariff. Mr. D. N. Crowley of Danvers the Democratic Candidate for Senator was the second speaker and his remarks were attentively listened to and generously applauded. Mr. W. B. Estelle of the N. Y. tariff Reform Club was the last speaker and dwelt chiefly on the Tariff. He held the people attention until 10.20.

Wants $5000 for prescription.

Emma Howe has brought a suit against Apothecary James S. Dudley of 18 Park square to recover $5000 damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by her. The plaintiff says that she brought a prescription from a doctor to the defendant's store to have filled, but that the clerk who undertook to do it put medicine different from what the prescription called for. By this alleged failure to comply with the requirements of the doctor's order she suffered great pain and bodily injury.

Price of Tea.

The cost of common tea is about 3 cents per pound. The cost of manufacture, export duty, packing, etc., about double that price; so that the cost on board ship amounts to about 51-2 cents per pound. About 300 or 400 pounds of brick tea go to a "basket," made of light bamboo. Two baskets form a camel load. Brick tea is in bulk about one-sixth of ordinary tea. In Mongolia, where the nomad population of herdsman have little use for money, their tents, clothing, food and temples being supplied by their flocks, brick tea forms a standard of value and a convenient medium of exchange, as it is in universal demand for food, says the New York Ledger. A brick, or half a brick, of tea, is placed in a copper vessel, and boiled with mutton fat and butter, and the food is eaten hot a liquid condition. Lately a new commodity has come on the Hankow market, to which the custom give the name of log tea. It is an inferior tea, with stalks packed in the shape of logs, which weigh from 8 pounds to 80 pounds each log. The tea is wrapped in the leaves of the Bambusa latifolia, and then reduced in bulk by binding round the log with lengths of split bamboo. This log tea is sent to the Chinese ports for consumption, and is packed thus from motives of economy, both of packing and of freight.

AN ODD CORPORATION.

WHAT MRS. MARY TYLER DID TO SAVE HER HEIRS TROUBLE.

She Transferred Nearly All Her Property
to an Incorporated Organization Called
"The Tyler Estate"—Real Estate in Several Cities.

Among the property items which the city is trying to acquire title to for the proposed Ninth regiment armory in Fourteenth street is a lot belonging to the Tyler estate. The Tyler estate is a novelty among the corporations of the country. It is not the estate of a deceased person, as one would naturally infer from the title, but is the estate of a wealthy western widow, who has had her real estate holdings capitalized and a stock company formed to take and hold the titles to it. Her object is said to be to so arrange the titles to her property that when she comes to dispose of it by her will there will be the least possible opportunity left to disappointed relatives to contest her will and drag her name and private history into the courts and before the public.

The certificate of incorporation of the estate recites that it was organized under the laws of Missouri as a corporation for manufacturing and business purposes, and is called "The Tyler Estate."
It was organized under the legal advice and direction of Henry Hitchcock, of the St. Louis bar, a lawyer of that western city, who is said to have assured his client that the laws of Missouri authorized the organization and formal incorporation of real estate corporations.

The founder and principal proprietor of the Tyler estate is Mrs. Mary Lawrence Tyler, widow of Robert Tyler, of Louisville. She is said to be worth several millions, principally in lands and property in this city, Philadelphia, Louisville, St. Louis and other places, all of which, however, she has conveyed to the Tyler estate, taking the stock of the peculiar corporation in payment. The estate is capitalized at $500,000, but that does not begin to represent the actual value of the property it owns.

THE LAW IN SEVERAL STATES.

The real estate records of this county show the transfer of two pieces of property to the estate by Mrs. Tyler in February, 1888, the time when the corporation was formed. One of the items is the lot in Fourteenth street, which is wanted by the city for armory purposes, and the other is a business building and lot in Crosby street, between Broome and Spring streets. The city authorities and the representatives of the estate could not agree upon the price to be paid by the city for the Fourteenth street lot and condemnation proceedings have therefore been begun, wherein the price will be fixed by a commission.

But the principal interest in the affair attaches to the corporation itself. Many devices have been resorted to in times past by wealthy people who had large estates to dispose of by will to prevent the quarreling of heirs over the manner in which the property has been distributed by the owner in his or her will, but this is the first instance ever heard of in which a private person, having no desire or intention of going into business, expressly incorporated for a limited liability corporation might exist, has voluntarily had her property capitalized and represented in stocks and bonds.

In some of the states corporations for the purpose of holding titles to real estate are prohibited by law. New York is said to be one of these states and Illinois another. But they are apparently sanctioned by the laws of Missouri, and the laws of this state permit the holding of title to real estate by any corporation organized under the laws of any other state, the laws of which authorize the existence of a corporation for the purpose stated.

HOW THE SCHEME MAY WORK.

Who the present officers of the Tyler estate are could not be ascertained, nor any statement regarding the details of the organization—whether the corporation has more than one executive officer, how the property is managed by the officers, or in what manner transfers of real estate belonging to such a corporation could be made so as not to affect the value of its shares or to impair the security of the bonds. How long a life such a corporation could have is a question, furthermore, which no lawyer could answer offhand.

But it is claimed for it that the property can in this manner be held together for long periods of years, whereas, under ordinary conditions, no sooner is a wealthy person's will filed for probate
than a long contest begins in the courts between the various heirs over the manner of its distribution among them.

By incorporating, as Mrs. Tyler has done, it is declared that all trouble of this character is done away with. The testatrix will not her property, but a certain number of shares of her estate to each heir, who is limited by his opportunities to either accept or reject them. This, however, still leaves the contesting heirs opportunities to fight
over the distribution of the shares.

But Mrs. Tyler expects to get the better of this class of heirs by giving away
the shares to the persons she desires to have them before her demise. The corporation, as said, is a novel one, but,
like the trust, may prove to be only the forerunner of many which will be organized as soon as the legal status of the Tyler estate shall have been passed upon by some competent legal tribunal.—New York Times.

Musio From Insects.

The notes of the katydid are perhaps as familiar as any and have a certain fascination, the sounds taking on various inflections and meanings. They are produced by rubbing the inner surface of the hind legs against the outer surface of the front wings—fiddling, in fact.
When the male cricket sings in the hearth it raises its fore wings and scrapes them against its hind ones. Even the butterfly makes a sound audible at some distance, certain species having been heard to utter a clicking sound.—St.
Paul Dispatch.

LITERARY NOTES.

"A Soul above Skittles" is the title of another of his delightful parlor comedies which W. G. van Tassel Sutphen will contribute to the forth coming number of Harper's Bazar.

Among the interesting features of the next number of Harper's Weekly will be a full-page illustration of the consecration of Bishop Phillips Brooks; also an article by Julian Ralph on the new government station for immigrants at Ellis Island, describing the manner in which the immigrants are received there,
how cared for, and what disposition is finally made of them. Mr. Ralph's article will be copiously illustrated.

Harper's Young People announces a "World's Fair" for boys and girls, in which no less than 4000 prizes are offered.
The prizes include a bicycle and a library of 100 volumes, while not a few of even the lesser prizes are worth from $8 to $20. Every boy and girl are entitled to compete. The Young People sends a Prize List free, which gives full particulars. Its address is Franklin Square,
New York.

As the time approaches for the World's Fair, greater interest is being felt in the marvellous City of the Lakes. The Cosmopolitan Magazine has devoted 28 pages of the November number to a most interesting and exhaustive article upon Chicago from the pen of the famous novelist, Col. Charles King. Count Jacassy, who spent some time on the ground for that purpose, and Harry Fenn have illustrated the most charming features of the city by twenty-eight sketches. An article on Alfalfa Farming in this number, is by John Brisben Walker, who, as the result of ten years spent in the saddle, in direct superintendence of his farm "Berkeley." General Sherman's letters to his daughter, written from the field during the war, are valuable contributions. Judge Tourgee furnishes a charming story called "An Outing with the Queen of Hearts." Louise Chandler Moulton, Commander Crowningshield, ex-Postmaster-General James, are among the other contributors. Gen. Horace Porter's article on Militia Service is worthy the attention. C. Osbourne Ward, whose book "The Ancient Lowly"
last year excited so much attention, and who has made this subject his life work, gives an article in the November Cosmopolitan on the "Massacres of the Roman Amphitheatre," and the article is illustrated by drawings by Dan Beard, and from famous paintings, covering pages of history which will hold the reader's closest attention.

The barbarous treatment of the Jews in Russia is the subject of an article in the November number of the North American Review, by the Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the British Empire. The Chief Rabbi was induced by Lord Rothschild to write the article for the Review. Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, makes a powerful plea for Free Silver. The brilliant French woman, Madame Adam answers in the negative the question, "Does the French novel picture faithfully the life and customs of France?" Her reasons are given at length in an article of great ability and suggestiveness. "The Lack of Good Servants" a topic on which Mrs. M. E.
W. Sherwood discourses helpfully is an article which should be read by every housewife in the country.

Prof. W. O. Atwater, of Wesleyan University, contributes an article to the forthcoming November Century on "The Food-Supply of the Future"—the first in a series which will have especial value to farmers. The writer believes that the doctrine of Malthus—that the time will come when there will not be food enough for the human race, owing to the theory that population increases in a geometrical and food-supply in an arithmetical ratio—is one which never give the world
any uneasiness owing to the great advances that are being made in chemistry.

One of the most interesting articles in the November magazines is Frank B.
Sanborn's, "The Home and Haunts of Lowell," in the New England Magazine.
Mr. Sanborn was for many years an intimate friend of Emerson, Hawthorne, Toreau and Lowell, and he possesses a knowledge of the men which those who read their books can never attain. The personal element in this article is charming. The illustrations from pencil and pen and ink sketches made on the spot
by Sears Gallagher and Wm. Goodrich
Beal add to the attraction of the article.

Popularly called the king of medicines

The Sportsman's Month.

The sweltering days are over. Cool nights have come. The harvest has been gathered, but the stubbles are sprinkled with scattered grain and the shocked but unhusked corn dots the fields. The thunder showers are less frequent. The apples are being carted in, and the cider mill gives out its well-remembered creak as old Dobbin goes her round.

Now, if you are the true, keen field sportsman, whose slumbers of late have been broken by grouse's whirring wings or the sound of the skill whistle woodcock, you know your time has come. You take from the closet the breedloader and look it over, throw it to your shoulder and glance along its barrels. The feeling is growing on
you. How your heart thrills as you think of the bags last season and anticipate the present season's sport! And fortunate you are if you happen to have been country born or to have a friend or relative at an old country place where you are welcome in the autumn time. You know where to go for Bob White along the hedges by the old buckwheat field and down towards the hazel thicket, and for woodcock down along the spring-holes in the alders, and for the lordly grouse beyond the berry patch and bordering the sugar bush on the hillside facing the warm sun. The same old sugar bush!
What a place it used to be in your boy-hood for squirrels, gray and black and the little saucy red chickadee.

You step into the crisp morning air and feel the pure ozone as it fills your lungs.
What a breath you draw in! How your eye glimmers as you glance over the landscape! The grasses are dead and dry at the tops, the soft maple leaves are turning to crimson and gold, and perhaps you may perceive a slight tinge of frost on that upper rail as you leap the fence. And your dog—ah!
how he enters into the spirit of the occasion; with what frantic rushes he bounds here and there, away from you and back again, but watching your every motion. Let him go; he will be all right after you have crossed a field or two. Let him run and roll over and give tongue in the mad excitement of the first outing of the season.

The thrills at your heart are increasing, and will increase and keep on in volume and intensity until—but we will not anticipate. You cross the pasture down to that swale fed by the spring holes. You know the place well; its alders and bogs have been trampled though by the cattle in the hot days
just past. Steady, Dash! He is making game. How carefully he stops, how almost crouching. He pauses.
See the swift backward glance of the eye to assure him that you are ready.
How your heart is beating now! He comes to a point, and soon the bird springs from the bog and skirts toward that opening, or essays to climb up through the small treetops. Your heart stops beating your nerves are on a tension; and, as Frank Forester says, with "eye of faith and finger of instinct," you touch the trigger and see the puff of feathers drift off to leeward,
and the lordly bird turns over and pitch
down by that water birch, or that lump of oak turning red and yellow under the magician's touch.

And, ah! when your faithful dog brings it to you, holding it so gingerly and yet so securely in those vise-like jaws, with not a feather ruffled, you gently take it from him and pat his head, saying, "Good dog; good fellow."
And if it is a woodcock, you hold it up
by its long bill and gaze at that large,
full eye, fast glazing in death, and mark its round cinnamon breast and soft velvet-streaked back. Or if a grouse, you lay it on its back on the palm of your hand and stroke the feathers from the black ruff around the neck down its plump breast, calculating with the judgement of a sportsman on its weight.
How your breast is thrilling now! And as you stow it away in the recesses of your shooting coat you feel that the world is very grand and that you are one of the very fortunate ones "in it."

structure was built in 1753, when it was

GENERAL ROBERT ST. GEORGE DYREN-FORTH.

It is to the tendency of the American mind which considers nothing without the reach of man's ability, that the production of rain owes its present stage of development. The Government of the United States, in the recognition of the high value of rain-making, has appointed General Robert St. George Dyrenforth
as Special Commissioner for the Department of Agriculture and he is now experimenting with a corps of able assistants in Texas. The theory upon which the tests are conducted is one which for 25 years or more has been advocated and expounded by Mr. Edward Powers, C. E., of Wisconsin. If found practicable, Mr.
Powers will have the honor of being the author of perhaps the most wonderful discovery of modern times. Rain in its natural state is nearly always produced by the rapid union of two or more volumes of moisture-laden air, that differ in temperature. This union is brought about by the rain makers by exploding dynamite in high air. Their experiments have been successful at El Paso and particularly in Chihuahua Mexico. In the latter district the rains were sorely needed, as there had been a severe drought in that state for many months.

Tammany and Ballot Reform.

The attempt of a party committee to extort money from the employees of the national government for the expenses of the state campaign of the party is a wrong which we have often and plainly exposed. But it is ludicrous to hear this practice solemnly denounced by the supporters of Tammany as a reason for Republican defeat,
for Tammany is notoriously spoils incarnate; it has no principle or policy
but spoils, and it will force every clerk and street-sweeper and coal-heaver
within its grasp to pay heavily to secure Tammany control of the State by Damocratic success in election. The association of ballot reform or of any measure of honest administration with success is impossible, and when the TIMES, a journal with which HAR-PER'S WEEKLY is usually glad to co-operate, and to whose ability and high purpose it pays willing tribute—
when the TIMES says that if "the Democratic leaders would come out candidly in this campaign and give consent to the completion of the ballot reform" "it would draw the most effective fire of the opposition, conciliate the independent voters, and give assurance that this great reform would be completed next winter," it seem to us totally mistaken.—Harper's Weekly.

list and that the Democratic policy was to keep them on the free list and that the Democratic policy was to keep them on the duty list. And yet our Democratic orators this fall, as last fall, are talking about "free iron and free coal," when they know that the great Democratic coal and iron states of West Virginia, Virginia, Tennessee and Alabama will never allow their party to put those articles on the free list.

The Republican party stands for the same principles in the South, that it does in the North, in the West that it does in the East. It believes in the American system of protection. The best dollar in the world. In the rule of the majority, and in a fearless and honest expression at the ballot box. Choose ye between them.

Let me close by reading to you the following words: "The first speech which I delivered, after more than a year's absence in Europe, was in this great city last month. I then warned the laboring men of the United States, that a protective tariff was their shield and bulwark, that they could break it down with votes. I repeat that admonition in the same great city, here and now.

If the great army of wage workers in this country, will not protect themselves, there is no other power that can protect them. A century's experience of the tariff should be their warning and their guide.

It is for you to say if a century's experience should be a light to your own ground, no one else will maintain it for you.

The power is in your hands, it may be wielded for your destruction or it may be wielded for your protection and for your safety. These are the words spoken, and advice given, in New York City, in the last campaign, by the great American Statesman, James G. Blaine.

The presiding officer then stated that he had procured one of the ablest members of the last legislature, who, he believed, was the youngest member, to address his auditors, and proceeded to introduce Michael J. Murray of Springfield.

Mr. Murray made a vigorous attack upon the Democratic party, Governor Russell and G. Fred Williams and alluded humorously to the earnest support the latter was and had given the standard bearer, after making the public statement three months before the nomination, that William E. Russell was the paid agent of the West End railway and unfit to be Governor. He turned the laugh on the Governor for making the assertion a year ago that "as sure as the sun brightened the heavens, would prices advance upon the passage of the McKinley bill." He also narrated the episode of the landing of the Etruria at midnight preceding the day when the tariff was to go into effect. How the swiftest tugboat was despatched from New York to meet the great Cunarder which was heavily laden with foreign manufactures, and convey its officers with invoices to the shore, where the swiftest horses that could be procured, were waiting to convey them to the Custom House. How the Collector telegraphed to the Treasury Department to know at what hour the McKinley bill should go into force and of the cheers of rejoicing that went up from the throats of the agents of foreign manufacturers when on lightning wings the fleet team bore Etruria's officers and invoices to the Custom House at five minutes before twelve o'clock—midnight and the tariff was escaped.

Why, he asked, this solicitude from agents of foreign merchants and manufacturers, if CONSUMERS were to pay the tariff in enhanced prices. (The argument took the house by storm.)

He also touched up Williams' plea of opposition to the Republican party on account of its alleged gerrymander of this State last year, which was no gerrymander at all, he would like very much to know where his friend Williams stood. I wonder if he forgot, said the speaker, the hour in the committee room at the State House, when he faced his friend Quincy of Quincy and said, "You are the Judas Iscariot of the Democratic party." [Laughter.] In closing Mr. Murray referred to Gov. Russell's well-known calamity speech, calling attention to the fact that the Democrats had furnished $5,000 of them to the Republicans before they discovered that there was a quotation from the census placed upon the back of them, and then they sent the other 15,000 in reduced form.

Capt. John G. B. Adams was next introduced. He was in his most humorous vein and said:

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen—I am quite well known in Peabody, and you all know I am not competent to make a campaign speech. But when I read the speech of the candidate for Attorney-General at Springfield, Mr. Stearns, where he so misrepresented the pension appropriations. I went to headquarters and asked them if there was anything I could do, and the reply I got reminded me of the famous reply of Phil Carney when asked by a subordinate during the heat of battle where he should go in. "Anywhere," was the reply; "There's damned splendid fighting all along the line."

Governor Russell has said that national issues are not the issues of this campaign, and so I suppose Roger Q. Mills has been brought from Texas and ex-Speaker Carlisle from Kentucky to tell us how to kill the gypsy moth and why Crocker should be removed from the Railroad Commission. [Laughter.]

The speaker said the Democrats have always followed our lead. For the past twenty-five years they have been camping upon the ground we have advanced from four years before, and are continually claiming they did it. They have already claimed they fought the Rebellion and that there were more Democrats in the army than

Republicans—but the trouble is, they counted the Democrats in both armies. [Laughter.] The McKinley bill has come to stay, but a few years hence they will claim they framed it and that an Irishman from South Boston was the author of it. [Laughter.]

He spoke of the continual harping on our pensions costing more than the maintenance of the German army fallacy. It was catching. It was worse than German measles. Speaking of pension appropriations, he said if by Democratic influence, the pension appropriations were cut off, the thousands of widows and disabled soldiers would be unable to get one cent of pension; for the departments never pay pensions or anything else without appropriations. He spoke of the pension votes of Cleveland and the passage of the dependent pension bill that became a law by the signature of President Harrison, and cited pathetic cases of relief from distress by the new law.

He concluded with a glorious tribute to old South Danvers whose sons, many of them were with him in the war. Alluded complimentary to Moses Shackley, who wet the sponges and kept the batteries "booming" at the risk of life, at Gettysburg.

The president then stated that it had been impossible for Messrs. Long and Greenhalge to be present, and the meeting dissolved amid loud cheers and the enlivening strains of the band.

Douglass, the Great Negro Statesman.

Who will take Fred Douglass' place as the leading negro orator and statesman, is in the minds of the people now, as Mr. Douglass is retiring to private life. Without question Rev. J. C. Price, D. D., of Salisbury, N. C., who many of the Northern visitors to the Southern Exposition have had the pleasure of meeting, is the smartest negro the race has ever produced. He is full bodied, very dark, of splendid physique, has full, keen eyes, a massive head, and a pleasant smile on his face at all times. He has by his own exertions built up the largest industrial school for colored people in the South. It was through his influence and energy that the negroes took up the work of making a display at the Southern Exposition, and he is now the leading spirit of that work. He is Commissioner-in-Chief, and under his direction a great display is made by the colored people. A display that says to the Northern men and women who work for the freedom of the race: Your work was not in vain; you have done a great thing in freeing the colored people of the Union, and now they repay you by showing to the civilized world that they are worthy to be free men and women.

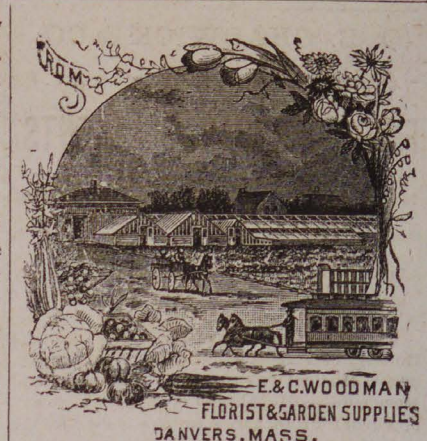

Almy, Bigelow & Washburn, as publishers of "Fashion, an illustrated monthly journal for American women," offer premiums in gold coin to the value of $500 to those who get the largest clubs of subscribers to the paper before Feb. 15, 1892, divided as follows: $150 to the first, $75 to the second, $25 to the third, $10 to those getting over 200 subscriptions, and $5 to those getting over 100 subscriptions. The paper itself is well worth the fifty cents a year which is asked for it, and their generous offer will set all hands at work for the prizes.

It is not the intention of the firm to have any one go unrewarded for his or her work, and every one will receive 10 cents premium paid on subscriptions sent before February 15. Price; 50 cents a year.

Any Article that has outlived 22 years of competition and imitation, and sells more and more each year, must have merit. Dobbins' Electric Soap, first made in 1869, is just that article. Those who use it each week, (and their name is legion,) save clothes and strength, and let soap do the work. All that we can say as to its merits, pales into nothingness, before the story it will tell, itself, of its own perfect purity and quality, if you will give it one trial. Ask your grocer for it. He has it, or will get it. Try it next Monday.

There are many imitation N. B. Electric Soaps in which electricity plays no part. Dobbins' is the original one, all Magnetics, Electrics, and Electro-Magics are fraudulent imitations. Ask for Dobbins' Electric, see that our name is on every wrapper, and if any other is sent you by your grocer, when you order ours,—send it back to him.

Colcord-Heathcote.

A pretty home wedding occurred at the residence of Mr. Mark Heathcote on Lagrange street, Salem, at noon on Wednesday, when Maria E., his daughter, was joined in holy matrimony to John Henry Jacobs Colcord of this town. Rev. E. P. Farnham of the First Baptist church, performed the marital service. The bridesmaid of the occasion was Miss Harriet Heathcote, sister of the bride, and Herbert Wilkinson of this town was best man. The bride was decked in white china silk and the maid in robin's egg blue henrietta.

The guests numbered only the relatives and nearest friends of the two families.

Presents numerous, costly and beautiful gladdened the hearts of the twin, one from the church choir of which the bride was a member being especially noteworthy.

The bridal party took a Pullman for Boston whence they proceeded to Florida by steamer, where they pass several weeks.

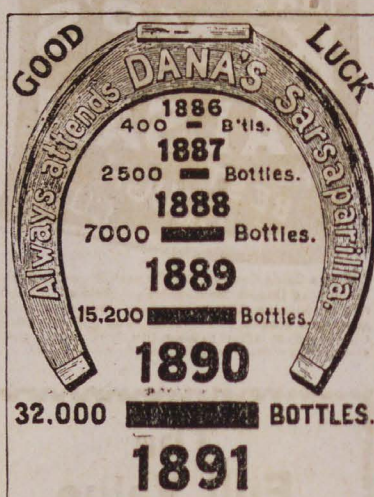

Home Wedding.

Monday noon a wedding took place at the residence of Mr. Charles B. Farley on Main street, when his youngest daughter, Miss Lucy R. Farley, was united to Henry C. Butman of Salem, by Rev. James P. Franks, rector of Grace church in that city. They will reside in Brookline.

Fourth Anniversary

On Thursday evening last the British American Association celebrated their fourth anniversary by a banquet, served by McCrillers & Co. of Salem, speeches and music by representatives from Boston, Lynn and Salem and members of Peabody branches. James Lee of Salem was the pianist and contributed much to the pleasure of the evening. The company dispersed at a late, or rather early, hour, all feeling very much pleased with the success of their fourth anniversary.

Sam Small and the Temperance problem.

The gathering in Town Hall on Sunday evening will afford a rare opportunity for the people of Peabody and vicinity to hear a representative Southern Orator. His subject, Christian Temperance furnishes scope for his versatile powers.

One of our Lawyers said I would go any time to hear Small speak if I did not believe a word he said.

Small is one of the finest products of better south. Born to the best of opportunities. He is by birth and education a gentleman and although very young at the time, he was sent to France as representative of the Southern Confederacy. Since the war he has filed well the position of educator and editor and has now a position as a preacher and lecturer.

One of our newspaper men asked why Small was brought here at just this time and received for answer, "This is the time when we can get him." And when he asked if the intention was to influence the vote, he received for answer that we wish Small could make it "dead sure" that no rum man could be elected to any office and that he would make it just as certain every anti-rum man will be elected without reference to party nominations.

A Daring Robbery.

Fred Woods of West Peabody visited Boston one day this week and about 2 o'clock in the afternoon entered a store at the West End and purchased a necktie, exhibiting at the time considerable money which was seen by four men who followed, him and when he entered a cigar store at 60 Merrimac street to buy a piece of tobacco, he was assaulted and held by three of the gang while the fourth relieved him of forty dollars in money, arrests followed. The struggle was so short that the proprietor of the store was unable to offer any assistance.

Helps our Manufacturers.

Our imports for July, 1891, were only $13,666,516 against $23,405,572 for July, 1890. In other words our manufacturers, owing to the McKinley bill, have produced at least $10,000,000 worth of goods that would otherwise have been produced abroad and imported in one single month. Our manufacturers got the work, but our consumers have not paid higher prices in consequence. Simply Americans did the work instead of foreigners, and thereby had more money to spend for other American products. Meanwhile our exports of agricultural products are far ahead of last year.

Experiments Fertilizers.

Farmers in the older States are opening millions of dollars annually for commercial fertilizers. In this country, as in Enrope, they have become an absolute necessity on worn-out soils; but to make them profitable it is necessary that they should fit the wants of the soil and crops for which they are used. If a farmer buys potash for land which abounds in potash but needs phosphoric acid, he of course loses. The fundamental principle in the use of commercial fertilizers is to select those materials which supply in the best forms and at the lowest cost the plant food which the crop needs and the soil fails to furnish.

In order to enable farmers to find out the wants of their own soils and the best way of supplying them, and at the same time to get light upon the properties of soils in different sections of the country, a number of experiment stations are introducing soil tests with fertilizers, which are largely conducted both by the stations and also by individual farmers on their own farms. Of course many of the experiments are failures, but many practical men who have engaged in this work have declared that they have thus learned a great deal which is practically useful and highly instructive.

The results of these tests in general show that "soils vary greatly in their capabilities of supplying food to crops. Different ingredients are deficient in different soils. The best way to learn what materials are proper in any given case is by observation and experiment. The rational method for determining what ingredients of plant food a soil fails to furnish in abundance, and how these unfurnished materials can be most economically supplied, is to put the question to the soil with different fertilizing materials, and get the reply in the crops produced. The chief use of fertilizers is to supply plant food. It is good farming to make the most of the natural resources of the soil and of the manures produced on the farm, and to depend upon artificial fertilizers only to furnish what more is needed. It is not good economy to supply the lacking ones in the cheapest way."

Probably the most valuable practical work that these experiments stations have done has been to analyze these various commercial fertilizers which are offered for sale by manufacturers. In some of the States, in New Jersey, for instance, the fertilizers are analyzed and the qualities of chemicals found in each sample compared with what the manufacturer claimed that the composition contained. So as to make this perfectly plain, the money value of the chemicals found in each sample is noted and compared with the price charged by the manufacturer. Some startling results have been shown. One fertilizer selling, say, at $25 per ton would be found to have a value of $23; another, selling at $40 a ton, would be found to be worth only $15; and in one instance I recall the manufacturer charged $43 a ton for his complete fertilizer, and the chemist found that its actual value was only $2.50. Bulletins like these have certainly done great good, for they have compelled manufacturers to keep their composition up to the advertised standard. When there is more universal education among the farmers it will only be necessary to express the value of fertilizers in chemical terms. We have the authority of the United States Agricultural Department for the statement that in the State where experiment stations have long been established the greater number of the farmers now need nothing more than these chemical terms to guide them in selecting the special fertilizers needed in given cases.—Harper's Weekly.

NOTED AND QUOTED.

Melrose will do her share towards electing a Republican governor this fall if the vote comes out as well on Nov. 3 as it did at the recent representative caucus. Although the town of Melrose cast only 698 Republican votes last November the Republican representative caucus proved interesting enough to call out 836 voters. Mr. Barret won by a handsome margin, the vote standing Barret, 556; Washburn, 330.—Wakefield Banner and Citizen.

It is now stated that the propose amendment to the constitution to abolish the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting, which is to be presented to the people for acceptance at the State election, applies only to national and State officers, and not to city and town elections. Further legislation will be required if it is to be extended to city and town officers.

Thus, if the amendment is adopted, a man otherwise qualified, would have the right to vote for officers of state or nation, but when it came to town and city officers, he must plank down his tax as of old. If anything is to be done at all about the matter, the constitution should be amended properly, not simply tinkered.—Cape Ann Breeze.

Hon. W. W. Crapo scores a hit when he says: "We claim that the Republican policy which would make two blades of grass to grow where one grew before, is better than that Democratic policy which would kill the single blade because, forsooth, it is cheaper somewhere else."—Wakefield Banner and Citizen.

The New England Sugar Refinery is not quite in Somerville, but it is so near the Somerville line that a great many Somerville people are interested in it. They will undoubtedly be interested to know that the refinery has recently received a cargo of sugar from Java, containing more than eleven million pounds. The freight charges on this great cargo were about $50,000, and the duty was more than $250,000 less than it would have been a year ago.

Here is a saving of $250,000 to consumers, in consequence of the passage of the McKinley bill, and as the products of the New England refinery are sold mostly to New England people, they will get the advantage of this reduction. The New England refinery is the only one in this section that is outside of the sugar trust, and its products are so fine that they sell at from an eight to a quarter of a cent above trust prices. The facilities of the refinery are so great that the refining of even this great cargo will take only about six weeks. It will be seen, therefore, what a saving to the people the McKinley bill has caused, taking as a basis the work of this one refinery for a year.—Somerville Journal.

Major McKinley is now on his ninth week of actual stumping, traveling hundreds of miles, and making sometimes several speeches a day. He is a man of great physical endurance.

It occurs to a philosopher as being a very good thing for a man that he cannot realize his insignificance. His vanity is all that keeps him from suicide. CHAPTER III

A tall, handsome man of distinguished bearing

Seen first in the light of a sunset which filled the whole earth and sky with roseate flush, Guadalajara, with its slender towers and shining domes rising out of the wide, verdant plain, seemed to Derwent like a city of a dream—as fair and white and graceful as if built of marble and ivory instead of common bricks and mortar. “La Perla del Occidente,” a friendly Mexican fellow traveler told him it was called, and the poetical name suited its appearance well, as it lay steeped in sunset color, the spires of its cathedral rising against the pellucid sky its Byzantine domes glowing with iridescent color, shaded avenues leading to its gates from all directions, and exquisite ranges of azure heights framing the beautiful expanse of the great valley which encompassed it.

“What a picture!” said Derwent to himself, as he craned his neck out of the window of the railway car to take it in more fully. “And what a country!” he added, as his glance swept from the pearly towers to the wide, luminous horizon, over miles of level plain covered with tender green and set with gleaming villages. “As beautiful as Europe, as picturesque and romantic as the east. I really hadn’t the faintest idea of what I should find here!” he added, passively, as the train, slackening its speed, passed through a gap in the city walls and made its slow way to the station.

“You were inquiring for the Cosmopolita,” said the conductor, as it finally stopped. “Here is the porter.” And he pointed to a tall, slender Mexican, wearing a short, braided jacket and the name of the hotel in large letters around the crown of his sombrero.

This dignified person took Derwent’s valise, invited him by a gesture to follow, and threaded his way easily through the crowd toward the place of exit. Declining a carriage—for the exquisite evening air made walking a delight—Derwent followed his guide along a street which led past a beautiful old church with an elaborately sculptured front of brownstone, through a lovely plaza green with trees and fragrant with roses and violets, where a military band was playing and numbers of people were sitting and walking, up a crowded thoroughfare lined with handsome buildings, and finally into the courtyard of a large Spanish house, where at the head of the broad stone steps he was met by an English speaking landlord, who relieved him of all further necessity to think for himself.

An hour later he was seated at one of the small tables placed invitingly around the gallery which overlooked the large inner patio, or court, with Señor Fernandez opposite him. The scene was altogether charming to eyes fresh from a more northern latitude. The polished tiles that formed the floor of the wide gallery stretched to a stone balustrade where broad leaved tropical plants were set in large pots, while through the great arches that sprang from pillar to pillar the dark violet sky, sown with golden stars, looked down. Around the gallery various other parties were dining at the tables set here and there, waiters, noiseless as oriental slaves, skimmed lightly back and forth over the smooth pavement, the air was soft as a caress, and—most important point—the cuisine was excellent.

In the intervals of doing justice to it Derwent studied the appearance of the man to whom Morrell had consigned him. Señor Fernandez was probably of middle age, but he bore his years lightly. A slender, dark man, well bred, well dressed, with all the courteous suavity of his country, it was impossible not to find him agreeable; yet Derwent was conscious of a sentiment of distrust, which he could only account for by believing that it sprang from a warning given him before he entered Mexico by a man who knew the country well.

“The men,” he said, “whom I advise you to look most sharply after in business dealings are Mexicans who have learned their business methods in the states. It is a sad fact that in the matter of honesty they are very likely to be demoralized. Doesn’t say much for our higher civilization, does it? I never regretted trusting a native Mexican, but when you find one who is thoroughly Americanized it is generally safe to watch him.”

This warning from a shrewd practical man had struck Derwent as rather an amusing commentary on the higher civilization which at another moment the speaker would have been ready enough to arrogate to himself and his people, but he remembered it when Morrell said to him: “You’ll find Fernandez speaks English perfectly—he lived sixteen years in California—and is thoroughly conversant with American habits. He’s a capital partner for me. He manages the Mexicans and gets the mines, while I introduce them to the notice of inquiring investors like yourself. You’ll like him. I know.”

Derwent was doubtful on this point, and he still remained doubtful when he met Señor Fernandez. Yet there could be no question of that gentleman’s agreeable qualities. As they dined together he proved a very pleasant companion—waived the discussion of business, talked of the attractions of Guadalajara, lightly sketched its history and deftly changed his tone when he found that Derwent had scant sympathy for the aggressions and tyrannies of the so-called “liberal” government. Señor Fernandez, it appeared, was one of those gentlemen who always find it convenient to uphold the existing order of things. He spoke familiarly of ministers and governors, shrugged his shoulders when Derwent denounced the wholesale robbery and persecution of the church, was evidently too highly civilized to possess either religion or patriotism, and thought that the golden day of promise would dawn for Mexico when giving up her “antiquated customs,” she would be recreated according to the admirable pattern of her neighbor across the Rio Grande. He was somewhat astonished by Derwent’s reply to this.

“When that day comes, if it ever does,” said the young man, “your country will cease to be worth caring for. She will lose her individuality and become a feeble copy of a civilization altogether alien to that which has made her what she is. All that renders her most attractive to those who have any cultured appreciation will disappear: the foreign charm of her beautiful old cities, the exquisite manners of her people, the decorum of her women, the respectful obedience of her children, the grace of her picturesque, unhurried life, but more than that, the things that she will copy will be the worst things in the civilization she desires to imitate. There can be no doubt that ‘sharp American practices’ will be among the first improvements that American admirers will import into Mexico.”

Señor Fernandez smiled, but it was in a somewhat disconcerted manner, as he bowed over his glass of claret. “I am delighted to find that you have so high an opinion of Mexico,” he said. “Most Americans think that we have much to learn and that we cannot do better than copy their more fortunate country.”

“Most Americans—like their English kinsmen—are too narrow minded to understand that patent Anglo-Saxon methods of civilization don’t suit every people,” said Derwent. “God knows, they had better reform themselves before setting out to reform the world. But you take nothing more, señor. May I offer you a cigar?”

It was accepted and lighted, the table cleared and then the two men looked at each other with a glance of mutual interrogation.

“Let us get to business now,” Derwent said. “You have heard from Morrell, of course. You know that I am here to examine the mine that you and he are offering for sale. When can we go to see it?”

“We can start tomorrow if you like,” the other answered. “We will take the diligencia to Eitzatlan, and from there it is twenty leagues on horseback to the Buena Esperanza.”

“The Good Hope,” said Derwent, unconsciously translating. “Is that the name of the mine? It may be a good omen.”

“The man who first found the lode and gave it that name thought so, and it proved so good a hope to him that he realized a fortune from it. Several fortunes, in fact, have been realized from the Buena Esperanza; but now the water is troublesome, the ores have grown rebellious, the present owners are too poor to handle the property, and so they will sell. It is a wonderful mine to go for such a price, Mr. Derwent. You will say that when you see it.”

“If so, the price will be promptly paid,” said Derwent. “But what is that Morrell was telling me about a difference of opinion among the owners with regard to the sale?”

“Oh, there is one of them who is dissatisfied—thinks the mine ought to bring more, doesn’t want to sell at all in fact, and regrets having joined in the bond. But the others brought pressure to bear on him and made him sign; so you need not fear about the title.”

This was explicit enough and sufficiently plausible, but the same instinct of distrust which he had been conscious of at first made Derwent say to himself that there was something in the transaction which might not perhaps reflect credit on Señor Fernandez if known. It plainly did not concern him, however, to take up the vaguely suspected grievance of an unknown Mexican. That must be settled between the parties concerned. All that he had to do was to look at the mine, and if assured of its value pay the price asked in case a good title could be given him. It was settled that they would start the next morning, and since nothing could be determined until this journey was made, Derwent, who heard seductive strains of music near by, proposed that they should finish their cigars in the open air.

“We will go to the plaza,” said Señor Fernandez. “Every one is there tonight. You will see some very pretty women. Guadalajara is famous for its beauty.”

“There are very pretty women in Mexico,” observed the young man. “In fact I think that one face which I saw in the Alameda last Sunday morning is the most beautiful I ever saw anywhere.”

“Oh, Mexico, being the capital, gathers its beauty from all parts of the country, and of course it has more fashion, more style,” replied Fernandez. “But it is hard to surpass Guadalajara for lovely girls. Come and judge for yourself.” They passed out into the soft, tropic night. The plaza from which the music proceeded was only a block distant, and when they gained it Derwent thought that he had seen nothing more handsome and imposing even in the city of Mexico than the surroundings of the beautiful garden which occupied the centre of the large hollow square, the old Plaza de Armas, that was always the scene of tumult and fighting whenever revolution arose or war invaded the city.

Tonight, however, it was difficult to imagine that it had ever witnessed such scenes. In the middle of the garden rose a light Moorish pavilion, from which a military band was pouring forth music. Orange trees that filled the air with the fragrance of their blossoms lined a broad walk surrounding the pavilion, and between opposite rows of well filled benches two streams of promenaders were walking—all the ladies in one direction, all the men in another, thus passing and repassing each other as often as the circuit of the square was made. Electric lights shed their white radiance over the scene. People were coming and going constantly, joining the ranks or dropping out of them, sitting down to talk with their friends or passing from group to group. There was animated movement, but not the least disorder, for the perfect manners of the people are never more fully displayed than in these large open air gatherings, where the same courtesy and decorum reign which would distinguish a private company in the most exclusive drawing room.

Derwent sat down with his companion on the first bench where vacant seats presented themselves, and looked at the setting of this attractive scene. One side of the square was faced by the long and handsome front of the governor’s palace, the other by the great mass of the cathedral buildings—a picturesque mixture of Byzantine and Greek architecture, with its tall towers rising against the deep violet sky. The remaining two sides were lined by brilliantly lighted arcades, and the whole effect was of a long established order and opulence.

“Oh, yes,” said Señor Fernandez, in answer to a remark to this effect, “Guadalajara has been a place of great wealth and importance for more than two hundred years. It is only second in importance to Mexico itself. But observe whether or not I have spoken to you correctly of the beauty of our ladies.”

As he uttered these quick, disjointed remarks, his companion turned, stared at him for an instant, and then, following the direction of his glance, saw in the line of promenaders a tall, handsome man of distinguished bearing advancing with a beautiful girl on his arm. She walked with a step as firm, a carriage as stately as his own, and they were both of appearance so striking that they would have attracted attention anywhere.

“Oh! you know Don Maurizio then?” said Fernandez, in a tone of surprise, which, had Derwent observed, would have struck him as not being very well pleased. But he did not observe at all. He was looking at the lovely face of the girl passing by, as he answered absently:

“Don—who? No, I don’t know the man at all. But that is the same lady I saw in the Alameda in Mexico last Sunday. How curious that she should be here!”

“No more curious than that you are here yourself,” answered the other, smiling. “Those people have a large hacienda near this place, and Don Maurizio has evidently come in to meet his daughter on her return from Mexico.”

“Well, so he is. Do you think he looks like a Mexican? He is Don Maurizio Ormond, who married the great Cardella heiress. She had a magnificent estate, but it has doubled or trebled it since it came into his hands. He has remarkable business capabilities, but then he had such opportunities as do not come to many men. His daughter is very handsome and a greater heiress than her mother. It is said that her father will look at no one less than a prince for her.”

“No, we have only a few great landed aristocrats to represent them, but Don Maurizio, it is said, will go to the Old World for an alliance for his daughter. He comes, I believe, of a noble family himself, and as for the Cardellas, everybody knows that they are of pure Spanish descent and have held their lands by royal grant since the Conquest.”

“The matrimonial prospects of the Señora Ormond seem to be a good deal canvassed,” said Derwent. “Morrell told me, when I saw her in the Alameda, that she would probably marry her cousin, the representative of her mother’s family, in order to restore the lands to the name.”

“The Cardellas are, of course, anxious for that; but it is said that Don Maurizio does not favor the idea. How Dona Zarifa stands herself I have never heard, but she will certainly have a word to say in the matter, or report does her injustice.”

“She has too noble and too strong a face not to have a word—the most important word—to say,” Derwent remarked positively. “That girl will never allow her hand to be given away for considerations of family or ambition. But they do not return. Surely they have grown tired of walking very soon.”

“By all means,” answered Derwent, rising lightly. As with his companion he fell into place in the circling masculine throng, he did not think of the difference between the first time he had seen Dona Zarifa and the present. The first time he had been indifferent whether he saw her again or not, while now he was conscious of a strong desire to look once more on a face that fascinated him like a rare and exquisite picture.

But, although he made several circuits of the plaza, and scanned as closely as was compatible with good manners the row of faces on each side of the promenade, he had no further glimpse of Don Maurizio or his daughter.

THE WAKEFIELD Banner and Citizen has the following complimentary words for John M. Danforth of Lynnfield, who is the Republican candidate for Representatives in the district which includes Lynnfield and two wards of Lynn:

"In the Nineteenth Essex district Representative John M. Danforth, of Lynnfield, is a candidate for re-election. He has been an able representative, a man of excellent judgment, always punctual in attendance on his legislative duties of the town of Lynnfield and his district. He ought and undoubtedly will be re-elected."

Mr. Danforth is a man of character and integrity and deserves the re-election which we have no doubt he will receive.

THE TIME is at hand when the sovereigns of this Commonwealth will express their choice of public servants. Registration closed last Wednesday night, with 1993 names enrolled upon the lists, and on Tuesday morning at eight o'clock, the various polling places will be opened to receive the suffrages of the people.

The registration is larger than any previous year without exception, and there is no reason why the vote on Tuesday should not be correspondingly favorable numerically. It has been predicted by Prof. Flagg that it will rain on election day. Perhaps it will; but if the Republicans of this town and elsewhere through the Commonwealth bestir themselves and poll their full strength, the opposition will be more inclined to believe when the day is done, that it has snowed, and they have been snowed under.

In the contest of next Tuesday we have to elect between the lists of candidates, one headed by Mr. Russell, the other by Col. Charles Herbert Allen of Lowell.

But while the choice of candidates is ostensibly the only matter to be determined, there is in reality a broader and deeper issue which has arisen out of the developments of the campaign in which we are now embarked, that reaches beyond the confines of the geographical boundaries of Massachusetts.

All through the campaign the platform orators have persistently harped upon certain issues involved solely in national politics. The tariff has been discussed and distorted, free silver coinage has furnished a fruitful theme for campaign oratory and the matter of pensions and pension appropriations has claimed no inconsiderable attention in some parts of the state, and thus false issues have incidentally been forced upon the voters of Massachusetts, which while important in the immediate economy of state government, have a singular and striking significance in the solution of problems which Massachusetts in common with her sister states will be called upon to solve in the next campaign.

The country at large has turned its eyes upon Massachusetts. The national issues which have been foisted upon her citizens, perhaps out of season, and before their time, have become to the country at large real issues which they expect to see solved on Tuesday, no matter how insignificant we may consider them in the present juncture.

Mr. Russell represents the one side of the tariff; Col. Allen represents the other.

Mr. Russell represents the national party of free silver coinage, which proposes to settle indebtedness on the insolvency plan of seventy-nine cents on a dollar. Col. Allen stands as an exponent and example of the national and state party, that says by the preponderance of its vote "the laborer is worthy of his hire" give him an honest one hundred cents on the dollar. Mr. Russell represents the party which, when it last held the reins of national government and had the opportunity to relieve the distress of numerous soldiers and widows of heroes of the late war, said by its cold blooded veto, no.—If you want relief from pecuniary distress go to the poor house. Col. Allen represents the party of national affairs that came into power because of the heartless refusal of a Democratic President to pay to the soldier and to the soldier's widow from an overflowing treasury, the money that was justly due.

All these matters are secondary to state government, but should the voters of this Republican state forego party prejudices and traditions this fall and elect William E. Russell to succeed himself in the executive chair, from motives of personal friendship, or preference; the interpretation other states of the Union will give to the act, will be an endorsement of those national principals and traditions of which he is the representative; while the election of Col. Allen and the rest of the list of Republican candidates, will be hailed as a rallying signal, to support home labor, honest currency and justice to the brave soldiers who preserved the Union.

ESSEX COUNTY.

The representative of the Granite Shoe Company, Mr. Safford, has signed a price list with the Lasters' Protective Union for one year at union rates, and will discard the lasting machines, which have not proved satisfactory. These machines have been run by non-union help. This is regarded as quite a victory for the lasters.

N. B. Quimby of the Lynn Trades' Union, a plumber, employed by H. W. Heath, slipped on the long steep stairs leading to the Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium Tuesday and fell breaking both bones in his right ankle. He rolled down a distance of twenty-five feet.

The Lynn Yacht Club has postponed the final racing for the expert cup to the next season.

The Supreme Court has decided that the tribunal which decreed the expulsion of Prof. Smyth of Andover Theological Seminary was void in consequence of irregularities in its proceedings. The merits of the charge preferred against the Professor, of heresy did not come before the Court, as the mode of procedure was declared wrong, and hence there was nothing further for the Court to consider.

Governor Campell has sued the Philadelphia Press company for alleged libel. The communication complained of, stated that the Governor owed large sums of money which he was unable to pay.

Harmelt Bros. & Co., French capitalists, have leased the Union Mills at Manchester, Conn., for three years. They will engage in cleansing wool and scouring hides, a large force of employees will commence operation at once. They will make extensive repairs and erect new buildings. The firm is a branch of a large company in Southern France, and it is reported that its capital is $2,000,000.

Columbia and, Charleston, S. C., has been visited again by quite severe earthquakes.

Read This. HONEST MONEY.

The Republican party is for honest money.

The Democratic party in Congress last winter voted for free coinage. The result of free coinage would be that owners of silver mines would be able at to-day's prices to take 75 cents worth of silver to the United States Mint, and the Government would coin it into a dollar, which would be a legal tender to be used in the payment of the wages of every workman in the country. As long as the country could maintain its credit the owners of silver would make this twenty-five cents upon every dollar issued.

The Republican party has one hundred cents behind every dollar which it issues, and the workman can exchange his coin certificate, issued today, for gold at any Sub-Treasury of the United States.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The Republican party has protected the public schools. It has made clear the law relating to them, and has obliged all private schools to teach in the English language all the subjects which the law requires to be taught. A large majority of Democrats voted against this requirement.

REPUBLICANS FAVOR TEMPERANCE

The Republican party has enacted all the temperance legislation which appears upon our statute books. It has limited the number of licenses to be granted for the sale of intoxicating liquors. It has reduced the amount of alcohol which non-intoxicating liquors could contain. It has raised the price of licenses. It has submitted to the people an amendment to the Constitution to provide for prohibition. It has enacted the local option law.

The Democratic party has favored none of these measures. It vehemently opposed them all with substantial unanimity. Every year the Democratic party has attempted to break down our temperance laws. This year their Governor recommended the abolishment of the bar clause, so-called, and the re-establishment of the public bar.

The Democratic party, almost to a man, voted in favor of the bill. The Democratic Governor approved it.

The Democratic party last winter voted to double the number of licenses to be granted in cities and towns voting license.

This measure was defeated by the Republicans. It is not conceivable that it would have been vetoed by the Chief Executive of a party whose campaign Treasurer writes to liquor dealers in the city of Boston and solicits a contribution of $1000.

DEMOCRATIC MISSTATEMENTS.

The Democratic party is the party of calamity and stagnation.

The Republican party is the party of prosperity and progress.

Governor Russell in New York heralded the decay of Massachusetts, its farms and its manufactures. The census shows that our manufacturing is increasing and has increased in value and in the amount of product.

Governor Russell stated at Gardner that the farm lands of Massachusetts had diminished $6,000,000 from 1875 to 1885; that the value of products had decrease, and that the amount of acreage under cultivation had decreased.

The census and the report of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor show beyond peradventure that the farm lands have increased $6,000,000, not decreased, as the Governor stated, that the value of agricultural products has increased, not decreased, and that the acreage under cultivation has increased, not decreased.

If the official are true, His Excellency misstated the condition of Massachusetts.

ATTACK ON THE VETERANS.

The Democratic orators have made a preconcerted attack upon the veterans of our late war. Gov. Russell at Sandwich this year indorsed President Cleveland's veto of the Dependent Pension bill.

REPUBLICAN PRINCIPLES AND DEMOCRATIC PRACTICES

The principles of the Republican party in national issues as affecting the campaign this year are shortly stated:

Restriction of immigration and the exclusion of paupers and criminals. Free ballot and an honest count at every polling precinct in the United States. Honest money and protection for American industries and fair treatment to American labor.

LABORS PROTECTED.

It is noticeable that they did not even favor the demands of the laboring men. When an amendment was proposed to the Mills bill to exclude the products of foreign prisons, made by foreign criminals, it was defeated by the Democratic House of Representatives.

The Republican bill, the McKinley bill, protects the honest laborers of the United States from the unjust competition of foreign criminals, and prohibits the importation of the product of foreign prisons.

The Democrats, while professing to be the friends of the laboring men would have left them in direct competition with the convict labor of Europe, and the Republicans prevented this competition. Which policy do the laborers favor?

INCREASED COMMERCE.

The Democrats stated that the McKinley bill would diminish American commerce and build a Chinese wall which would prevent trade from other nations.

The United States Treasury report for September shows that our exports for one year are $61,000,000 more under the McKinley bill than they were for the preceding year without it, and that our imports have increased $11,000,000.

The Democrats preach free trade in private and free raw materials in public in Massachusetts.

Judged by their most recent action in Congress, they are preaching what they did not practice. The Democratic bill, the Mills bill, left the duty on sugar and did not give us free coal, free iron ore, free food or the free raw materials which they now pretend to desire. Their bill was to favor the South at the expense of the North.

THE GOVERNOR'S INATTENTION.

Gov. Russell has himself admitted that he signed two bills without giving proper attention to them. The first because it escaped his notice, and the second because, as he says, he did not know that it was unconstitutional.

He should have given more attention and scrutiny to the State's business.

It has been shown that he has not even visited half of the State's institutions.

TREATMENT OF RAILROAD MEN.

Gov. Russell refused to reappoint as Railroad Commissioner Mr. George G. Crocker, though he was urged to do so by a convention of railroad trainment representing five States. They urged it unanimously and regardless of party.

A committee of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, representing every railroad running out of the city of Boston, also urged Mr. Crocker's reappointment. They urged it not because of party preference, but because Mr. Crocker was the Chairman of a Committee of Railroad Commissioners of the United States whose duty it was to procure the passage of a law which should compel the railroad companies to use automatic couples and power brakes upon freight cars. Over 22,000 employees of railroads are killed and injured annually, and over 9000 in coupling and uncoupling cars alone. Most of these lives could be saved by proper legislation, but Gov. Russell refused to comply with the request of these laboring men.

The only reason which he attempted to give for his refusal was that the Railroad Commissioners had rendered a decision against the Governor's own city of Cambridge, and this offence could not be pardoned.

REPUBLICAN PRINCIPLES.

The Republican party, as was stated in the beginning, stands for honest civil service reform and against party spoils. It stands for honest money and against free coinage; it stands for the protection of American industries and American labor. It believes in American markets for American workman and the exclusion from our country of paupers, criminals and others who are unfit for the duties of American citizenship.

It stands for temperance and against the demands of the rum-sellers for more licenses, and is opposed the re-establishment of the public bar.

It believes in education and in the intelligence of the American citizens, and it stands for that most glorious of our American institution, our free public schools.

As the sun is superior to the stars, so DANA'S is superior to all other Sarsaparillas.

The Rainmakers

The rain makers are reported to have been very successful at San Diego Texas. They began operations recently on Friday evening and continued them through the night. At midnight the moon was shining brightly in a cloudless sky with no sign of rain anywhere. At 4 o'clock in the morning rain was falling in torrents, and continued for an hour. It is stated that the rainfall extended for 40 miles to the Southeast, 108 miles to the West and 30 miles to the Southwest. The experiments were conducted by John T. Ellis and Lieut. Allen Dyer, of the 22d Infantry.

SCROFULA

Is that impurity of the blood which produces unsightly lumps or swellings in the neck; which causes running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or "humors," which, fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. It is the most ancient of all diseases, and very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. If you suffer from scrofula, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, my little boy, three years old, being a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. We all took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and all have been cured of the scrofula. My little boy is entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. ABERNETHY, Passaic City, N. J.

LOCAL LINES.

A gang of men has been at work this week setting poles for the Lynn and Boston street railroad electric system. The poles are chamfered hard pine square sticks.

Registration closed with 1993 names upon the lists on Wednesday evening 104 more than last fall and 50 more than were enrolled for spring election. The list is growing steadily every year.

Rev. W. P. Ray will lead the Gospel at the Temperance Meeting in Franklin Hall tomorrow at 5.45 P. M.

A romantic yet sympathetic case of destitution has been discovered at South Peabody. A man over seventy years of age, his wife about thirty-three a boy of ten and a seven months old infant are living in a small tent on Summit street, on account of poverty. The man is a battle-scarred veteran of the Mexican war and has a pension of $8 per month—is his only income.

Charles Hodgkins died at his residence on Walnut street Thursday of consumption. He was a musician of considerable ability and an adept with the violin. His regular vacation was teacher of music at Lynn.

The lad who was wanted by the police for larceny of property from his father-in-law, returned from Canada this week and surrendered himself. His adopted parent declined to appear against him however, and the complaint was dismissed by the court.

Six cars will be equipped with Rae motors on the Essex road in a few days. The motor works very satisfactorily.

The Skating Rink opens tonight for the season, music will be furnished by the same band employed last year.

The concert given last Sunday evening by the Hampton jubilee singers was not a blooming success either financially or from an artistic standpoint. No piano was provided by the management, and the vocalists were obliged to vocalize without instrumental accompaniment of and kind. The audience numbered some over 300.

Mr. Augustus Harrington gathered some strawberries out-of-doors last week.

The two cider mills owned respectively by Mr. C. S. Emerson and J. S. Needham, in West Peabody have been kept busy this fall. It is said, more cider has been manufactured there this fall than ever before. They are encumbered with more apples than they can conveniently handle.

The W. C. T. U. observed Friday at Franklin hall, as a day of prayer for the national convention soon to be held in Boston. The meeting commenced at 1 o'clock, with a change of leader each half hour. At 3 P. M. Miss E. T. Larkin gave a Bible reading.

Rev. and Mrs. A. Francis Welch will give a reception to members of Universalist parish on Thursday evening, at their new abode in the Little house on Main street.

Derene N. Stoddard who was formerly in charge of the Blaney farm and later engaged in conducting a farm in Lynn has removed to Portsmouth, N. H. His Lynn farm has been laid out lots by the city.

Warren Wilson, who has been carrying on business at the old Hardy tannery for some time past, will remove to the J. F. Harris tannery about the first of next month. The Hardy yard, which was the largest in Peabody at one time and employed the most men, is in bad repair, and is all falling to pieces. It is owned by the Savings bank.

The old buildings at the corner of Foster and Short streets, formerly used by Thomas E. Wilson as a machine shop, are being taken down. The property belongs to the town, being used years ago as an engine house by the fire department. When the contract for an electric light plant was let out a year or more ago, this lot was selected as a location for the power station, and Mr. Wilson moved out, and since then the place has been unoccupied, although the idea of locating the power house there was abandoned some time ago.

The members of the Essex Agricultural society held a meeting Tuesday evening and elected Nicholas M. Quint a trustee to succeed Francis H. Appleton. N. A. Bushby, E. P. Barrett and John E. Herrick were appointed a committee to assist the president in local work.

R. E. Shaw who has been a clerk at Edson & Co.'s grocery ever since the opening of this branch, has left the employ of that firm and taken a position with J. A. Moody of Lynn.

J. Shedd Needham of West Peabody sustained a severe strain of the chest recently and is confined to the house under care of a physician.

In addition to election of state, county and district officers Tuesday, voters will also give in their ballots, yes or no, upon the following propositions, viz: 1st. Shall the proposed amendment to the Constitution relative to the qualification of voters for governor, lieutenant-governor, senators and representatives, be approved and ratified? 2d. Shall the proposed amendment to the constitution making a majority of members a quorum in each branch of the general court, be approved and ratified?

William D. Northend appeared before the Selectmen last Saturday in behalf of the Boston and Maine railroad to oppose the widening of Railroad avenue, but upon learning more definitely the object of the petition, concluded to withdraw and consult the Manager before going further. The hearing was continued until November 14.

S. A. Southwick and Amos Merrill declined to serve as wardens on election day in precinct 2 and Levi Preston and George F. Sanger have been appointed to fill the vacancies by the selectmen. George A. Griffin and P. H. O'Connor were appointed inspectors in place of Messrs. Preston and Sanger who had been promoted.

Polls will be opened at 8 o'clock and closed at 4 30 on Tuesday.

Why it is popular. Because it has proven its absolute merit over and over again, because it has an unequalled record of cures, because its business is conducted in a thoroughly honest manner, and because it combines economy and strength, being the only medicine of which "200 Doses One Dollar" is true—these strong points have made Hood's Sarsaparilla the most successful medicine of the day.

Band leader—You wants us to play mit dea funeral? Ees it's a military funeral? Stranger—No, it's the funeral of my brother. He was a private citizen. He requested that your band should play at his funeral. Band leader—(proudly)—My pand eh? Vy, he shoose my pand? Stranger—He said he wanted everybody to feel sorry he died.

Darn your hose, madam! exclaimed the man, as he stumbled over the sprinkling apparatus that lay stretched across the sidewalk. No, she answered, as she adjusted her spectacles, I guess not today. I do all my own mending.

We tip our scales to learn our weight, and tip the waiter to avoid a wait.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed condition you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed. Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free. F. J. CHENEY, & CO., Toledo, O. Sold by druggists, 75 cts.

Chicago University purchased this week at Berlin, a library that comprises 280,000 volumes and 120,000 dissertations in all languages. The money for the purchase was subscribed by Maj. Rust, Martin A. Ryerson, Charles L. Hutchins and H. H. Kohlsta. The acquisition gives Chicago 200,000 volumes not to be found elsewhere in the North West, and many volumes not to be found in the whole country. The estimated book value of the collection is $300,000 or about $700,000 catalogue price.

An explosion in the United States Mine Supply factory at Cleveland, on Tuesday killed 3 men. The money value lost by the explosion and fire that followed was $75,000.

PASTOR KOENIG'S

NERVE TONIC

More Than Satisfied. XII

65 CHESTER PL., BROOKLYN, N. Y., June 19, 90.

For over twelve years my son has been afflicted with spasms; he would have one every two weeks until about six months ago, then even two a week. We took him to a number of first-class physicians and we tried everything and any number of remedies without deriving any encouragement in his case, and had commenced to despair of ever being able to cure him at all, when we heard of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic and concluded to give it a trial. The result has more than satisfied us! It is more than three months since he commenced to take this Nerve Tonic and he has never been sick since. Please accept our most sincere thanks, for we feel that you have not only cured him of a great affliction but have saved his life as well, as we do not think he would have lived long in the condition he was in before he commenced taking your valuable remedy.

PUFF! AND OUT THEY GO.

A Cavern in Colorado That Resents the Intrusion of Strangers.

There is a cave near Rockwood, a station on the Denver and Rio Grande railroad, which has been visited by many persons. No particular mention of the cave has been made, as it seemed to be little worthy of notice. On Sunday last a number of pleasure seekers left this city to join a party at Rockwood who had planned to visit the cave. About 4 o'clock in the afternoon the members of the party, having disposed of their dinner, began to climb the hill near the top of which the mouth of the cave is located.

After much exertion the foremost of the party reached the mouth of the cave, and being in advance of his companions they were startled to see him fall backward into the low oak brush as if he had been thrown from a catapult. His companions pushing forward more vigorously, soon came to his rescue and found him recovering, not much hurt, but slightly scratched and somewhat dazed. He could give no explanation of his sudden removal from the opening to the cavern.

Curious to know what the cause was the entire company in a body pushed up the hill, which has a particularly steep descent near the mouth of the cave. To the astonishment of the whole number the instant after stepping into the cave they found themselves all piled together in a spot near where the first had landed. It took but a little while to recover from the entanglement, when they began to inquire the cause of this sudden excitement. They all agreed that they had seen nothing to cause such a thing, and they were curious to know the reason for the phenomenon. But how to find out what they wished was the thing to decide.

At last it was determined that the strongest gentleman of the party should gain a position at the side of the entrance, and, thus protected, get an opportunity to reconnoiter. So, taking a circuitous route and avoiding a position directly in front of the opening, they soon found themselves close beside the entrance. Cautiously putting his head out beyond the protecting wall, the foremost peered it. His hat immediately took flight down the declivity, but he was thus made aware of the exact state of affairs.

The philosophy of the current of air in caves suddenly dawned upon him. As is well known the air of a warm day in summer is much lighter on the outside of a cave or cellar than it is inside. Consequently the cold, heavy air rushes out with great violence—enough in this case to cause the trouble spoken of and throw the party down the hill.

Later, relating this tale, an old timer told your correspondent of a former adventure of his at the same place. On a cold day in the early winter he was tracking a deer along this hillside, when he was astonished to see the cave open before him, and he noticed that the snow seemed to have been disturbed very recently, as though a body had been dragged into the entrance.

With a sinking, he stepped forward to examine into the cause of the disturbed condition of the snow, when he felt himself violently pulled into the cave, the force pulling him from his feet. He felt a shock, and for awhile was oblivious to all around him. When his senses returned he found he was lying by and partially upon the body of a deer. Upon examination he found the body of the deer very warm. This led to a still closer examination. He at last determined that the force of the current of air blowing into the cave had drawn the deer in, killing it, but that when he was drawn in the shock was somewhat obviated by his striking the deer, thus saving him from death. The explanation is just the reverse of the other, the air being warmer inside the cave than out. The current flows into the cave during the winter, thus accounting for the strange affair.—Denver Sun.

Taming a Zebra.

Zebras can never be tamed, unless the process is begun while they are still very young. H. A. Bryden gives an instance of a tragic fate which befell one of them, captured when he was 7 or 8 years old.

He had joined a troop of horses belonging to one of the author's friends, and finally allowed himself to be driven with them into a kraal or inclosure. It was then determined to keep him, and if possible to domesticate him.

For this purpose he was lassoed and tied to a tree, but so ferocious was he in the presence of man that the greatest precautions had to be observed in approaching him. All possible means were taken to induce him to feed. When captured he was in splendid condition, and his coat shone in the sun. Herbage was brought from the mountain tops where he had been used to graze, and every conceivable food placed before him, but in vain; he steadily refused to eat.

Water he drank greedily, and would dispose of three bucketfuls at a time.

At length, after three weeks of vain endeavor to tame the noble creature, during which time he subsisted entirely on water, he died.—Youth's Companion.

The Use of the Word Telepathy.

The term telepathy must not be introduced without explanation. Some term not yet in common use must be employed when mental phenomena—influences of mind on mind—not generally seen to be closely related have to be classed together and, if possible, brought under one law. The familiar term "thought transference" has much too limited a meaning. And "telepathy" is already in use. It has been adopted by the Society for Psychical Research, and among other writers, especially by Mr. Edmund Gurney.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Delayed.

Briggs—I saw your wife in a dry goods store yesterday morning.

Griggs—You did, eh? She must have been pricing something.

Briggs—Why so?

Griggs—She was late to dinner last night.—Cloak Review.

Spring-Tooth Harrow.

Properly set, this is one of the best of implements for pulverizing the soil. To re-adjust the teeth uniformly, place the harrow on blocks of the desired height on the barn floor, then loosen the teeth and lower them until their points touch the barn floor, and then fasten them securely. The higher the harrow is raised from the floor, the deeper the teeth will stir.—(American Agriculturist.)

Specimen Cases.

S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was troubled with Neuralgia and Rheumatism. His Stomach was disordered, his Liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured him.

Edward Shepherd, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O., had five large Fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured him entirely. Sold at Wm. T. Lee's Drug Store.

Starting a Balky Horse.

Among the various methods for starting a balky horse one which was recently described by a Massachusetts man is worthy of a trial. This plan consists in putting the reins down through the collar when the horse refuses to go, and holding his head tightly back toward his breast. The position is so uncomfortable that after being kept in it for a little while the horse is glad to straighten out his neck and move along. This method is said to be more effective than either whipping or coaxing, and it has the merit of being quickly and easily tried.—(American Dairyman.)

STARTLING FACTS.

The American people are rapidly becoming a race of nervous wrecks, and the following suggests the best remedy: Alphonso Hempling, of Butler, Pa., swears that when his son was speechless from St. Vitus dance Dr. Miles' great Restorative Nerve cure him. Mrs. J. R. Miller, of Valparaiso, and J. D. Taylor, of Logansport, Ind., each gained 20 pounds from taking it. Mrs. H. A. Gardner, of Vista, Ind., was cured of 40 to 50 convulsions a day, and much headache, dizziness, backache and nervous prostration by one bottle. Trial bottles and fine book of marvelous cures, free at Wm. T. Lee's who recommends and guarantees this unequalled remedy.

Pulse of Animals.

The pulse of the horse can be most easily detected upon the lower jaw, just forward of the curved portion, where the artery crosses the cord and bone at the same time; it may also be felt, and often its pulsations seen, upon the long ridge above the eye, or may be found inside the elbow. In health it beats forty times a minute, and when more rapid it denotes fever or excitement. If slower, weakness. In cattle it may be found over the middle of the first rib, or in the artery upon the ankle joint, and should have from fifty-two to fifty five beats a minute. In sheep it is easiest found near the middle of the inside thigh, and should beat twenty-seven or eighty times per minute. Although not included in the query, we add that the rapidity of breathing is often as indicative of disease as the pulse, and while the horse naturally breathes nine to twelve times per minute, cattle vary from eleven to fifteen times, and faster or slower indicates nearly the same thing as it does in the pulse unless it results from over-exertion.—(Boston Cultivator.)

Some Strange Misnomers.

Much of the Russia leather comes from Connecticut, Bordeaux wine from California, Italian marble from Kentucky, French lace from New York, and Spanish mackerel from the New Jersey coast. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery comes from Buffalo N. Y., but there is nothing in its name to criticize for it is truly golden in value, as thousands gladly testify. Consumption is averted by its use, and it has wrought many positive cures. It corrects torpid liver and kidneys, purifies the blood, banishes dyspepsia and scrofula, renews the lease of life, and tones up the system as nothing else will do. What is more! it is guaranteed to do all this, or the price is refunded.

In the maddening crowd; Mary (softly)—Pardon me, I didn't mean to tumble against you, but this jostling is trying. William (gently)—Make no apologies, dear. It's just what I like. In fact, in all your life I want you to fall against my Will.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

TREMONT THEATRE.

"The Merchant," which has the attention of Tremont Theatre patrons this week and will also hold the stage during next week, has the distinguishing characteristic among plays of to-day, that its dealings are entirely with men and woman whose feelings and the expression thereof are understandable. There are of the home and household: they are aroused by happenings which could be anywhere in a commercial centre and are as natural, under certain conditions, not at all uncommon, as the everyday occurrences which make up home life. They are, therefore, wholly interesting. It is a sermon without preaching, and even the text is not announced. It has its wit and humor, as fortunately every home, even under trials and difficulties, will have, and it has a stir and continuity of interest which never flagging, by the license of the stage may be condensed by the players into one evening, still could find a counterpart in the home history of, as we will say a week or a month. It is safe to add that few plays of late years have had, so much, the deep and touching, the natural, and also artistic, interest which in the higher use of the term could be called a folk-play, as does "The Merchant."

CITY DIRECTORY.

Manager John H. Russel will bring his grand new company of Comedians to the Tremont following the engagement of "The Merchant," and as ever they will be welcome, some of them most heartily so as old comers; others, as very old friends in new surroundings. The lovely American dancer, Amelia Glover, has added to her previously unequalled list of dances,—her skill could not be greater, nor her grace and finish, they were incomparable before. Several others will be recognized as old friends whose ability no new-comer could equal. Among the new-comers who stand first in the profession are Luke Schoolcraft and Willis P. Sweetman, both of whom have glorious roles, entirely new, in the "Up to date" version of this work. The new version has received unqualified praise everywhere, and the comments are concise and to the point, comprised usually in the words, "Fannier Than Ever."

Patrons of the Tremont can enjoy the delightful comedy, "The Merchant," wager tickets for coming attractions upon the results of the election, and hear the returns of the election in Massachusetts and other States, while comfortably seated in the theatre. Arrangements have been made to receive these returns by direct wires running to the theatre, and the figures will be read from the stage in the between-acts of the performance of Tuesday Evening, Nov. 3. Seats are now on sale for that evening.

PARK THEATRE.

Realism in art has found an outlet in many curious ways, but it seems now to have "got down to the ground," to use the vernacular. The Belles of McAllister's 400, the beauties of Back Bay, and the stately dames of the blue grass region have at various times found an opportunity to perpetuate charms on canvass or on marble, painters and sculptors of world-wide fame have spent weeks and months with brush or chisel, in the endeavor to produce a counterfeit presentment of the beautiful curves of my lady's hands or the dainty taper of her aristocratic fingers.

In the sanctity of the boudoir on Fifth avenue or Beacon street may be found the graven image of the delicately turned ankle, high arched instep and blue blooded toes which in the original could be seen and admired but by a chosen few. Of course painters and sculptors both have been striven in their quest for the most perfect models of arm, hand or foot to the stage. For example, piquant Carrie Turner, at present playing a bare-footed Niobe in New York has been sought by a Gotham artist to let him reproduce in marble what he pleased to term "the entrancing perfection of her great toe."

But right here in Boston we have a more striking illustration of the new turn given to art work by the disciples of the realistic school. The writer happened to drop into the den of Robert Fischer at the Park Theatre yesterday. Having been admitted to the portals of the "County Fair" dressing rooms, the visitor ceremoniously tumbled into what is known by the people Park Theatre stage as "Rockbottom farm."

WALNUT ST., PEABODY.

Here it is that Mr. Fletcher puts on and takes off nightly the quaint character of Otis Tucker, the bashful, awkward country lover who for so many weeks has delighted Park Theatre audiences. Usually a friendly tap at the door of Mr. Fischer's apartment is answered by a hospitable "come in," followed by the invitation to "have a gourd full of Rock-bottom cider." This time there was a hasty scramble, whispered exclamations and what a sight met with the visitors' gaze.

There was the original of Otis Tucker kneeling as if in prayer, or rather as he appears in that ludicrous scene in the first act of the "County Fair," where, after having his boots "tallowed," Otis is about to leave for New York, when Aunt Abby discovers that gaping hole in the heel of his stocking. Park Theatre audiences always roar when Mr. Burgess says "That hole goes right to my heart." The visitor also roared upon his entrance, for, strange as it may seem, Otis Tucker's right heel was incased in a plaster cast, while a well known Boston artist of the realistic school was moulding it into shape.

Explanations of course followed, and now the secret may as well remain one no longer. The artist in question says that for months he has been searching in society, among the militia, and in the gymnasium for a man who was "well heeled." Repeated visits to the "County Fair" emboldened him to ask Mr. Fischer for a further and more intimate acquaintance with that important member which is nightly displayed through a heelless stocking to the Park Theatre audience.

"I have got it at last!" exclaimed the sculptor as he waved on high the plaster cast which reproduced the contour of Mr. Fletcher's generous heel. "Nothing like this has been attempted by my brother artists and I feel sure that the heel of Otis Tucker will long be a model in Boston art circles. This makes the sixth sitting that Mr. Fisher has granted me, and I have succeeded at last I think."

Boston art circles may be prepared in due time to admire the manly proportions and swelling curves of the rear portion of a foot which will tread the Park Theatre stage during the season's run of the "County Fair."—Boston Post.

COLUMBIA THEATRE.

"Men And Women" will continue its prosperous run at the Columbia theatre for the coming fortnight.

It has been announced that Sardon's "Diplomacy" would be produced next Monday, but owing to the success of "Men and Women" it has decided to keep Domille and Belasco's work upon the stage, and postpone the production of "Diplomacy" until the return visit of Mr. Frohman's company to this city later in the season.

William Gillette's latest work, "Mr. Wilkinson's Windows" will therefore be the next attraction at the Columbia.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

Oliver Byron will open a week's engagement at the Grand Opera House in his new play, "The Plunger." Mr. Byron has spent the greater part of a year in arranging for its production, and is thoroughly pleased with the result. It is a great deal more expensive than any of the former plays and said to be by far the best thing he ever did in the dramatic line. His part of Dexter Digby, the Plunger, is particularly fitted to him by the author, and gives him opportunities for showing his well-known abilities. Widow Clover was written expressly for and created by Miss Kate Byron. Her performance is considered finished in every respect. All her costumes are imported, and said to be marvels of taste and loveliness. The company supporting Mr. Byron has been carefully selected, with a determination to get the most competent artist or artists in each particular line, and is said to be one of the most evenly balanced companies on the road. The scenic effects are made a prominent feature of "The Plunger." There are many new and striking original ideas. A New York elevated railway train in full motion is one effect. The station selected for "The Plunger" scene is the Park Place depot. In an illuminated view of the New York Post Office, are the buildings of the New York Times, Morning Journal, Sun, Tribune, and Star offices. The act closes in a violent thunder storm, lightning, thunder and a steady downpour of real water. Other effects, too combine to make "The Plunger" a big go.

The School Mistress gives place to "Lady Jess" at the Museum, on Monday.

Modjeska plays Mary Stuart tonight at the Globe. Monday she will take the role of Louise Grenville in "The Tragic Mask."

Denman Thompson appears for the 65th consecutive performance of Josh Whitcomb in the Old Homestead tonight. The play draws crowded houses and will continue for some weeks yet at the Boston Theatre.

Charity Ball will be seen for the last time tonight at the Hollis Street Theatre.

Any Article that has outlived 22 years of competition and imitation, and sells more and more each year, must have merit. Dobbins' Electric Soap, first made in 1869, is just that article. Those who use it each week, (and their name is legion,) save clothes and strength, and let soap do the work. All that we can say as to its merits, pales into nothingness, before the story it will tell, itself, of its own perfect purity and quality, if you will give it one trial. Ask your grocer for it. He has it, or will get it. Try it next Monday.

There are many imitation N. B. Electric Soaps in which electricity plays no part. Dobbins' is the original one, all Magnetics, Electrics, and Electro-Magics are fraudulent imitations. Ask for Dobbins' Electric, see that our name is on every wrapper, and if any other is sent you by your grocer, when you order ours, send it back to him.

The School committee held their regular monthly meeting on Monday evening last, when in addition to the regular routine business and approval of bills, the following amount of business was transacted.

Mr. Winchester was authorized to purchase the necessary outline wall maps for the higher classes in the schools. Report of committee on fitting laboratory in high school accepted as progressing. Hygiene text-books and introduction of same to lower primary classes recommended to the same committee.

Committee on best reference book on American history given an additional time for final report.

Mr. Carroll gave a notice that at next meeting he would move the introduction of the Electric Primary History of the United States to be used as text books in the 3rd classes of the school, and with historical readers in the lower classes, and with civil government as supplementary reading in the Master's classes a better knowledge of Americans.

It was voted to close the high school Friday, the 13th, to allow the teachers to attend the Teacher's Institute at Salem.

Reception to the Universalist Church.

Rev. and Mrs. A. Francis Welch gave a reception to the Universalist parish on Thursday evening, the occasion being a sort of "house warming" of their new abode in the Little mansion on Main street. Although they had arranged to monopolize the acts of hospitality upon the occasion, their designs were pleasantly frustrated by a counter move on the part of the parish, and the host and hostess were surprised by the presentation of a handsome side board of quartered oak a steel engraving prettily framed, entitled "At the Well" and a sum of money.

As the guests arrived they were ushered into the parlor, and presented to the genial pastor, his charming wife, and Prof. Snyder her father and after enjoying a social hour all present were invited to partake of a collection provided by the hosts. During the progress of the latter ceremony Mrs. Pierce presented to the happy recipients the tokens of esteem donated by the parish. Mr. Welch made a fitting response by way of acceptance.

The entire house was placed at the disposal of the entertainers, and so large was the attendance, it proved none too much accommodation. The party dispersed about 10 o'clock.

Our Girls as Successful Women.

A wealthy woman recently gave $200,000 to establish a summer resort for poor mothers and their children. God bless her; this only one instance among thousands where woman has conceived and executed grand ideas. Women are rapidly entering every branch of the useful arts, and aspiring to every money-making employment. "What shall we do with our girls?" is no longer a mighty problem for mothers and fathers to solve. Some one has said "It takes a woman to set a hen;" and so it does. The most successful poultry raisers are women. We have in mind a woman who has for years raised finer poultry and got more eggs from her hens at less expense, than her male neighbors,—practical men too. Let your girls engage in the poultry industry, as many are doing. Give them a fair share of the profits, and they will soon convince their fathers that girls are mighty handy persons to have about the old home. With the aid now offered any person can make hen lays even in cold weather. Out of twenty-four gold coin premiums offered last winter for best results, one third were won by the woman who used Sheridan's Condition Powder to make hens lay. For example Mrs. Henry Baker, Holliston, Mass., won $10 and got from 18 hens during the three months trial 1359 eggs; Mrs. L. J. Wilson, Northboro, Mass., 3242 eggs from 100 hens. Mrs. Edwin Brown, East Greenwich, R. I., from 35 hens got 2454 eggs; Mrs. E. Bartley, Freeport, Pa., got 2029 eggs from 32 hens; Miss Ada L. Ross of Mt. Sterling, Ill., from 15 hens got 886 eggs; and Miss Maggie Croushore of Ottobine, Va., got 2000 eggs from 30 hens; each of the last five ladies also won a $5.00 premium from I. S. Johnson & Co., 22 Custom House St., Boston Mass. Every person who sends this firm now $1.20 for a can of Powder, and desires it, can have his name entered as a competitor, if the premiums are again offered. For 50 cts., they will send two 25 cents packs postpaid; six cans for $5.00, express paid; a large can of powder, also one year's subscription to Farm-Poultry monthly, both sent post-paid for $1.50. CHAPTER VI.

It was with a very strange sensation that Derwent came back to consciousness. He roused from stupor with a sense of fire applied to his shoulder and to his throat. The first resolved itself into the agonizing pain of his wound, as he was lifted to a partially sitting posture by a strong arm underneath him, and the second to a liquid which was being cautiously poured down his throat. He opened his eyes and looked up, to see a brown, solicitous face above him, and to inhale the odor of brandy from a bottle held to his lips.

"Ah! it has brought him to life," said the person administering this remedy, in a tone of satisfaction, and also in Spanish. "A little more, senior—a little more."

But Derwent shook his head and closed his lips. He was, in fact, almost strangled by the liquid, which had nevertheless served its purpose in bringing him back to a knowledge of his surroundings. He lifted himself to a more upright position, in order to relieve the terrible pain in his shoulder, and looked about him.

He found himself in the midst of a group of men and horses, among whom were none of his own party. All were strangers, all apparently Mexicans—as indeed what else was likely in this remote part of the country?—and a sense of despair seized him as he thought of his inability to make himself understood by them. Looking up, with eyes expressive of the suffering he was enduring, he could only touch his shoulder and say, "I have been shot—here."

All were strangers, all apparently Mexicans.

"English. I thought so," said another voice. And then out of the group of faces which seemed to swim around him one bent over him which had a vaguely familiar look—a face deeply sunburned, yet fair underneath the tan, as was proved by the dark blue eyes and the luxuriant brown beard. The exclamation which this person uttered had been in Spanish, but he now spoke to the young man in his own tongue.

"The wound is in your shoulder," he said. "Yes, I see you have bled copiously. Lie down while we cut away your coat and bandage it."

Derwent was very glad to obey this direction, for blackness was gathering around him again. He had lost a quantity of blood, and this, together with the blow on the head which he had received in falling, made him feel faint. He lay down obediently, and the stranger began to cut away the clothing from his wound in a very practiced manner. He muttered several comments in Spanish when he saw the wound; but he bandaged it skillfully, administered to Derwent another dose of the stimulant, and then asked him how he had been shot.

The account was briefly given. "The last thing I recall," said the young man, "is falling down the precipice. I must have struck my head against a tree or a rock, and from what I remember of the blow, which instantly stunned me, it is wonderful that it did not kill me."

"Your head is badly cut and bruised," said the other, examining it. "But if the last thing you remember is your fall, how did you get back here in the road?" Derwent found me in the road," said the other with surprise. "Then I can only imagine that the man who shot me had sufficient humanity to drag me back where I might be found. I suppose that he robbed me—yes, my watch is gone and also my purse!"

"But were you traveling alone?" "No. I had dropped behind my party because I was tired of riding and wanted to walk a little. Of course they will discover my absence soon, and return for me."

"It is strange that they have not done so before this. At what time were you shot?"

"About two o'clock. I am certain of that, for I had glanced at my watch not long before."

"It is now four. Is it not a little strange that they have not returned before this time to look for you?"

"It is incomprehensible," said Derwent. "Can they have been killed?"

That is very unlikely. Nothing of the kind has occurred before in years, and a robber might be bold enough to attack a solitary traveler, but he would not have dared to attack a party, would he?"

"Well armed," said the other, "it is impossible, then. But where is your place to investigate?"

"You must be done later. I must get medical aid. Do you think it is in a saddle and on a horse?"

"Can you do it," said the other, "in resolution."

"I can do it," said the other, "in resolution."

"I can do it," said the other, "in resolution."

"I can do it," said the other, "in resolution."

"I can do it," said the other, "in resolution."

"I can do it," said the other, "in resolution."

"I can do it," said the other, "in resolution."

"I will put you on my own horse," said the gentleman, "because he walks well, and will carry you with as little jar as is compatible with any motion."

"You are truly a good samaritan," said Derwent gratefully. "May I ask if you are countrymen?"

"Only in tongue, I fancy," answered the other. "I am an Irishman—Maurice Ormond by name. You are, if I mistake not, an American."

"Yes; my name is Derwent. I know now," he added quickly, "why your face has seemed so familiar to me. I saw you the other day in Guadalajara."

"That is likely. I have been there lately. Now, Señor Derwent, make as little effort as possible and let us lift you into your saddle. There—as half a dozen ready hands did the work—"that is accomplished; but if you are to stay there you must take more brandy."

The deadly faintness that almost overpowered him warned Derwent that this was indeed necessary. He took the stimulant willingly, and, thankful for the deep Spanish saddle which afforded him some support, they set out.

He perceived, now that he had gathered his senses a little, that the party formed quite a cavalcade. There were six or eight riders besides himself and the man who, having had to resign his horse to Señor Ormond, walked with a long stride and lithe bearing in advance of them. All, with the exception of the stately Irishman, were Mexicans of the purest type, and all seemed to be his attendants.

As they proceeded down the mountain Derwent looked about for some time in the expectation of finding the bullet-riddled bodies of Fernandez, Aranda and the mozos. But, since no sign of them appeared, his wonder increased over the remarkable fact that they had apparently not concerned themselves in the least about his fate.

"I cannot understand this," he said presently to Señor Ormond. "It is incredible that my companions should have deliberately abandoned me."

"If you will tell me who they are," said that gentleman, "I can better tell you whether or not it is incredible."

"One of them was a man from this part of the country, Señor Aranda."

"I know him. Who else?"

"A man who accompanied me from Guadalajara to show me a mine. His name is Fernandez. And two mozos."

"I know also—by reputation, at least—the Fernandez of whom you speak. May I ask what mine he brought you to see?"

"The Buena Esperanza. Do you know it?"

"Yes," replied the other, smiling. "I know the Buena Esperanza. Did you, while there, see or hear anything of one Señor Barrera?"

"I saw him yesterday at the mine. He came and had a fierce altercation with Fernandez. What passed between them I do not know, for, unfortunately, I have little knowledge of Spanish; but I perceived that there was trouble, and I declined to buy the mine. You do not think"—he looked at his companion with a sudden, startled glance—"that it could have been Barrera who shot me?"

"No," was the decided answer. "It certainly was not Barrera. He is a man of fiery temper and dauntless courage, capable of killing an enemy on sight, without reckoning consequences, but absolutely incapable of shooting him from an ambush. Besides, what quarrel had he with you? No, señor, do not even in your thoughts do so great injustice to one who is in all respects a true gentleman."

"I was favorably impressed by him," said Derwent. "But the whole thing is so strange. Why should I have been picked off, and why have my companions made no search for me?"

"You were probably picked off because you were lingering in the rear of your party—a foolish thing to do had you been aware of the danger—and so offered an excellent opportunity to the robber. Why your companions have not returned for you is more than I can answer. I advise you not to trouble yourself further about it now. I consider myself fortunate in having found you, and I really think it is fortunate also for you. I am the only English speaking resident of this part of the country, and my hacienda is near at hand, where you can rest and recover your strength."

"You are more than kind," said Derwent. "I put myself entirely in your hands. It was the greatest good fortune that brought you along this road."

"It was a lucky chance, certainly," said the other cheerfully. "I have been for several days visiting the outlying ranches of my estate, and am now homeward bound. Our road turns off at the foot of the mountain, and we will reach Miraflores in about two hours."

Two hours! If he had said two days Derwent could hardly at that moment have felt more dismay. With the terrible faintness from loss of blood how was he possibly to maintain an erect position in the saddle for that length of time? His companion must have read his thoughts in his paling face, for he said quickly:

"Whenever you feel too weak to go on we will stop and rest. I know that you are suffering horribly. Ah, I have a thought, Antonio! He turned, and as a young Mexican came forward spoke at some length in Spanish. "Si, señor," was the reply when he had finished, and touching his horse with the spur the young man rode on in advance so rapidly that he was soon lost to sight.

"I have sent him to the hacienda with orders to bring a carriage to meet us," his master said to Derwent. "We shall be out of the mountains and on the level land of the valley by the time it reaches us. Now, señor, if you can manage to keep up!"

It was hard work—the hardest, Derwent thought, that he had ever attempted—but, by the aid of renewed stimulant and desperate resolution, he fought the constantly threatening faintness, endured the pain which momentarily grew worse, and kept his seat. Once or twice he felt himself reeling, but a strong arm was instantly thrown around him and a halt commanded. He never consented to descend from the saddle, for he felt sure that if he did he could not regain it, but, after the rest of a few minutes, insisted on going on. It was like a dark and evil dream to him afterward, that passage through the mountain defiles, until suddenly, even to his pain darkened sight, there unfolded a glorious picture—a vast extent of wide, beautiful plain, green with cultivation, broken by stretches of forest, and with a distant silver lake gleaming in the last rays of the setting sun.

"Courage!" said his companion. "We are over the bad road now; the carriage must meet us before long, and Miraflores is not five miles away."

Derwent tried to smile, but he knew that his strength was going fast, and that if the carriage did not meet them he could never hold out for that five miles. Antonio had made good speed, however. With their slow progress they had hardly covered another mile, and he was on the point of saying, "You must take me down; I can bear no more," when a joyful exclamation from the whole party greeted the appearance of a carriage rolling rapidly toward them over the level, dusty road. Ten minutes later, they placed an insensible man in it.

CHAPTER VII.

"How are you feeling today, Mr. Derwent?"

"It is worth a journey to the Sierra Madre to see Miraflores," said a gentleman in the City of Mexico, many months after this, to Derwent. The latter agreed with the sentiment before having heard it, and added on his own account that it was well worth a bullet in the shoulder, when a week after the accident he lay on a couch near an open window with an enchanting picture before his eyes.

Through the arches of a gallery beyond he looked out over the great plain that rolled away like a verdant sea from the foot of the slope on which the hacienda stood, stretching in level expanse for miles, until it melted into blue, magical distance. Nothing was allowed to obstruct this glorious view, with its limitless turquoise sky above, its shifting shadows falling here and there, and the wonderful sense of vast space, of boundless freedom and all the conditions of a wild, romantic, patriarchal life which these immense tablelands of Mexico suggest.

As he lay in the pleasant weakness that follows the cessation of fever and pain, Derwent felt as if he could never weary of the wide, marvelous scene. But if he did, he had only to turn his head a little and there was a glimpse at one side of a pleasure that recalled the beautiful huertas which he had seen and admired at Tacubaya, near the city of Mexico. Like these, the grounds of Miraflores were half garden, half park, but, as he learned later, were far more picturesque and extensive than anything at Tacubaya.

Meanwhile his immediate surroundings were pleasant enough to have satisfied any but the most wandering fancy. The apartment in which he found himself was large and airy, with floor of shining tiles, frescoed ceiling and delicately painted walls. The furniture was simple, but very graceful—a bedstead of polished brass, a pretty toilet table of French design, a center table also of French in design, the slender, curving legs of which were faithfully reflected in the glistening floor, while on it stood a bowl of splendid roses. The couch on which he lay was covered with pretty chintz, as were also two or three easy chairs; rugs were scattered over the floor, and on a small table beside him was a crystal dish heaped with oranges. Three immense windows, opening on the gallery already mentioned, gave light and air to the room; while on the other side the double door opened on a court, which, with its oriental arches and brightly frescoed walls, its tropical plants and fountain, delighted Derwent's eye whenever he obtained a glimpse of it.

But there had been days after his arrival when not even these picturesque surroundings had power to charm him—when, indeed, he had hardly been conscious of them. After the painful operation of extracting the ball from his shoulder he had been partially delirious from fever and weakness, and had seen as in a dream the people around him. He was not certain whether he had really seen or only imagined Fernandez standing by him once, regarding him with a look in which he had felt that there was little real compassion. But he had never any doubt when the handsome, kindly face of his host bent over him; and presently he began to know equally well a delicate brown countenance, with gentle dark eyes and masses of black, curling hair, which belonged to the deft, noiseless attendant detailed for his service. As he grew better he found that Ramon needed only a glance or a gesture to understand and fulfill his wants. And so willingly, with so much gracious charm of manner, was this service rendered that Derwent, when he placed his arm around the offered shoulder to raise himself, felt as if he touched an affectionate friend rather than a servant.

The soundness of his constitution soon asserted itself. The fever yielded after a few days, and the wound began to heal in a satisfactory manner. But he was exceedingly weak, and it was only with Ramon's assistance that he could walk from his bed to the couch by the window, where he had now lain for two days, in-

"Get another dozen lamp chimneys." "What! are they all gone?" "Yes."

"I'm going to try a sort I've been reading about, if I have to send to Pittsburgh for 'em. Macbeth & Co.'s 'pearl-top.' They say their chimneys don't break."

"Another humbug, probably." "Don't Muggins keep 'em?" "I'm going to see. Give me a postal card. I'll have that chimney, anyhow."

Muggins got 'em for him, and did a thriving chimney business for several weeks, till everybody got 'em; and somehow his trade has increased all round ever since.

"Well! Well!" That's the way you feel after one or two of Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets have done their work. You feel well, instead of ill; and instead of being sick, you are healthy. You don't have to feel worse before you feel better. That is the trouble with the huge, old-fashioned pills. These are small, sugar-coated, easiest to take. One little Pellet is a laxative, three to four are cathartic.

They regulate and cleanse the liver, stomach and bowels—quickly, but thoroughly. They're the cheapest pill, sold by druggists, because you only pay for the good you get.

They're guaranteed to give satisfaction, every time, or your money is returned. That's the peculiar plan all Dr. Pierce's medicines are sold on.

Value received, or no pay,—"you can't get these terms with any other medicines, at any price."

—to punish you and throw a stigma on haling the fresh, delicious air as it came to him over leagues of space, and feasting his gaze on the wide, beautiful scene. With returning strength came a deep sense of gratitude for the wonderful chance which had thrown him into such kindly hands and brought him to this charming place.

It is not to be supposed that among elements of pleasure around him he ignored the probability of seeing again the beautiful face that had so attracted him

in the Alameda of Mexico and the plaza of Guadalajara. But illness dulls all emotions save those of pain, and when pain ceases, this in itself is pleasure enough for a time. As he grew better

he wondered a little if Dona Zarifa was at the hacienda; but no one had mentioned her name, and had his interest

been much keener than it was, he would still have felt that it was not fitting for him to make any inquiry on the subject.

But in fact his interest was not very keen; and although the idea of meeting

her was a pleasant prospect, he would not have been very much disappointed

had this anticipation not been fulfilled.

While he was lying wondering a little

now he should communicate the news of his accident to his mother, the door softly opened, and Ramon entered. He was a slender, handsome young fellow, with lithe Indian form well set off by tight fitting trousers and short jacket. He wore sandals on his feet and moved noiselessly across the floor. "Don Man-rizio, senior," he said, "wishes to know if you feel able to see him."

The question had been asked so often before that Derwent was perfectly familiar with it, and he answered in the formula that he had learned, "Certainly. Beg Don Manrizio to enter."

Ramon smiled approvingly, moved a deep armchair near the couch, and then, retiring, returned after a moment, ushering in the tall, stately form of his master.

"How are you feeling today, Mr. Derwent?" asked that gentleman with a cordial smile as he crossed the room and sat down in the chair arranged for him. "I am sorry to be rather late in making the inquiry, but the doctor gave a good report of you this morning and I have been far out on the hacienda today. My daughter accompanied me, and she is so devoted to riding that we made a circuit of at least thirty miles."

It was the first time that he had mentioned his daughter, and Derwent felt a certain thrill of interest at the name; but he only replied that he was feeling much better, and was, he thought, gaining strength rapidly. "How could it be otherwise," he added, "in such delightful quarters and with such admirable care? I do not know how I am ever to express to you, senior, my deep obligation for your great kindness."

"The kindness on my part is really nothing," said Don Manrizio. "I am sincerely glad to have been able to be of service to you and to see you improving so fast. But I am sorry to tell you that the mystery of your shooting remains a mystery still. The government officials have been making diligent efforts to find the robber, but there is no clew as yet. And, meanwhile, I regret to say that your companion Fernandez does not hesitate to accuse Senor Barrera of the outrage."

"What ground has he for the charge?" asked Derwent.

"Only his own enmity, in my opinion," replied Don Manrizio; "but he says that Barrera uttered threats against the whole party when he was at the mine, and this assertion Aranda—who is Fernandez too—corroborates. Unfortunately, not having any knowledge of Spanish, you cannot tell what passed."

"No," said Derwent, regretfully, "I cannot tell, further than this, that if Senor Barrera made any threats—and it is likely enough that he did, for he was a very angry man—they were directed against the others and not, I am sure, against me."

"Fernandez affirms that he included you, as a probable purchaser of the mine, that he went away declaring that no one should buy the Buena Esperanza and live, and that his intention in shooting you was to inspire terror, and prevent the possibility of selling the mine to any one else."

Derwent lay back on his cushions, and was silent for a moment. Then he said slowly: "I have been trying to bring before me as clearly as possible the appearance of the man I saw behind the bowlder, and I can most certainly swear that he was not Senor Barrera. The latter impressed me so much that I should know him again anywhere."

"Unfortunately, that does not help matters," said Don Manrizio. "Fernandez does not pretend that Barrera shot you himself, but he declares his belief that he had it done and that the robbery was a blind—not to deceive him, but the government."

"He is more likely to have had it done himself," cried Derwent impatiently, without pausing to consider his words. Don Manrizio's eyes met and held his, with a flash. "You have spoken my own suspicion," he said. "I should not have spoken it, because I have no knowledge of how long you have known Senor Fernandez, nor what your degree of intimacy with him may be. But I certainly suspect him of a plot to injure Barrera and at the same time revenge himself on you for your refusal to buy the mine. I know," he said, answering a look on Derwent's face, "that this sounds to you very melodramatic; but you must remember that we are a primitive people in Mexico, that we love and hate with a good deal of intensity, and that things as strange as this of which I speak are of sufficiently common occurrence among us."

"I am sure," said

6731 Plu.

IT WAS an easy victory for both our Republican candidates.

SOMEBODY SUGGESTED the first of the week that "even the leaves said Rustle."

UPON OUR inside pages today will be found a full account of the elections held in the several states on Tuesday.

MELROSE HAS again re-elected William E. Barrett and thus secured the honor of furnishing the House with a Speaker for another year.

IF MASSACHUSETTS could not elect a Republican Governor, it is a source of gratification to see Major McKinley elected by such a handsome majority, to preside over the destinies of Ohio.

THE INCREASE of Republicans in the legislature and the defeat of the Democratic Auditor will leave the Governor in rather a lonesome situation. Perhaps the former may result in forcing the Chief Executive to show his true colors through the veto.

THE COMPLIMENTARY vote by which Governor Russell was re-elected has already led to the association of his name with the second place on the National ticket, both by Democratic and Republican journals.

That don't cost anything.

THE BLOW dealt the Republican standard bearer on Tuesday by so called Crapo men was as great an injustice to Mr. Crapo as to Col. Allen, and is doubtless as much a subject of annoyance and regret to the former as to the latter gentleman. Mr. Crapo might well say "Deliver me from my friends."

SAY WHAT you may the election of Tuesday demonstrates that Massachusetts is still a Republican state. The defeat of the head of the ticket was due to Mr. Russell's personal popularity, the treachery of the Crapo adherents, for which Mr. Crapo was in no wise to blame, and Col. Allen's record upon certain so called labor measures, wherein no principal was involved, and which was a "two-edged sword," that would have cut both ways had Mr. Russell been on record upon the same questions.

The victory of Governor Russell is a marked compliment to him personally but by no means an endorsement of the principles his party professes.

THE SUSPENSION of the Maverick Bank on Monday, the most widely known of any similar institution in New England, though not the largest in point of capital produced a great sensation. It was fortunate under the circumstances that a more general financial panic was averted.

The latest reports indicate that seventy-five per centum will be paid, if not the entire indebtedness notwithstanding the enormous drains sustained by the malfeasance of its officers.

Col. Jonas H. French secured his liberty yesterday afternoon, his bail having been reduced to $50,000. Rumors were current that President Potter and Cashier Work would be rearrested on new charges, but there seems to be no foundation for the assertions.

Officers Pingree, Wiggin, Johnson and Carlin raided Edward Green's place, Dennis street, Saturday night and dug up from the bottom of the cellar thirty-two full bottles of old rye whiskey.

A Retrospect.

A couple of months ago there died in Beverly, a man worn and weary of the world, and for whom the flag of the old Volunteer Engine Co., was raised at half mast more than thirty years ago. The once colossal frame battered by war, disappointments and disease was gaunt and shrunken, and the old friends who remembered him in his lusty kindly manhood were saddened as they took their last look at the poor, pinched features of their old comrade.

"KILLED. — George W. Gray, St. Stephens, New Brunswick." — That was the news that flashed from Virginia on that hot July morning in 1861; and so the boys of his old company sadly set their flag on the tall staff in front of their house, and mourned for a good fireman as well as a brave soldier, and they told wonderful stories of his great strength, yes, and his great gentleness.

Those were times when patriotism, impulse and enthusiasm were masters, and men often went from their homes in the morning to their daily calling, and next day came back to their families in full uniform of blue, enlisted, sworn in, and eager to start with their regiment for the scene of war. Many of the volunteers from this town enlisted in distant camps, and fought in regiments from various parts of the state. Two men started from one of our morocco shops one day in the early summer of '61, signed articles for a fishing trip and when the vessel touched at a port in Maine to procure bait, they went ashore and walked into a recruiting office, enlisted as privates in the 2nd Maine Regiment and served gallantly through the war. One of these is a well known citizen and a veteran fireman, whose sturdy frame and ruddy countenance show few traces of the privations of war, or of advancing years. Four men, all morocco dressers, joined the 1st Mass. Vols. Col. Cowdon, whose headquarters was Boston. They were Robert Andrews, John G. Moore, David W. Osborne and George W. Gray. Of these four, David Osborne is the only survivor, but suffering, misfortune and age have overtaken the poor old soldier and he is but a wreck of his former self. Whatever pension he gets, he deserves it, and let us hope that a grateful country will never grudge the old soldier, kindly, generous support in his declining years.

The 1st and 11th regiments were among the earliest to be sent to the front, and if memory serves aright, they were the only three years regiments from Mass who fought at Bull Run, and who participated in the "On to Richmond" movement. On Thursday the 18th day of July, 1861, three days before the great battle, three companies of the 1st Mass. Reg. were sent out on a reconnaissance, as the enemy seemed to be active, and to be preparing for a movement. While cautiously advancing towards a little piece of woods, a masked battery suddenly opened upon them, and the little band retreated hastily, leaving many of their number stretched upon the field. Among the latter was George W. Gray who had been struck by a fragment of a shell and whose body was torn in such a dreadful manner that to his startled comrades, death seemed immediate and inevitable. When the roll was called that evening he was reported among the killed.

The great battle coming three days afterward completely overwhelmed all consideration of the affair of Thursday at Blackburn's Ford, and the universal feeling of surprise, rage, mortification and indignation, rather than consternation with which the news was received dominated all minor events. The public mind, eager and credulous, thirsting for fresh news, and not yet disciplined by harsh experience, was kept at a fever heat by the stories of the returning "Three months men," whose term of service had expired. The 5th Mass. Reg. participated in the battle, and in the two Salem companies, — the City Guards and the Mechanics were several men from this town. Kirk Stark and W. F. Sumner, were Lieut. in City Guards, and James H. Estes and present City Marshal of Salem, then a mere boy — Sergeants in the Mechanics. When the troops were advancing towards the battle field, Sergeant Hart who was a member of the same engine company with Gray saw him, weak and helpless in a deserted house at Centerville, and conversed with him. In the retreat all the wounded and disabled fell into the hands of the enemy, and it was not to be supposed that an exultant foe would encumber himself with a wounded Yankee, and one whose condition was so deplorable and so hopeless as that of poor Gray.

The long months of weary waiting which followed the Bull Run affair will be remembered by the older people. Both sides were fully impressed with the enormity of the struggle which was before them and stupendous preparations were made during the fall and winter of '61, for active operations in the spring. About the 1st of February, 1862, news was received somehow that George Gray was alive, had been exchanged among the first batch of prisoners and was coming home. It was true. Gaunt, hollow-eyed and hobbling on crutches, he came here to his friends, and told his wonderful story. A celebrated German surgeon in the Rebel service found him in the old house at Fall's Church, took pity on his condition, cleansed and dressed his rotting wounds and had him conveyed to Richmond. His case was deemed so unusual, and the fact of his being alive under such terrible conditions so wonderful, that he received special professional attention and careful management. And so he recovered. But in many respects he was changed in manner as well as in body. He was exceedingly good tempered and dearly loved lively company. He had a keen relish for wit, and a whimsical manner of telling a story. He possessed a power for picturesque profanity of a harmless nature, untinged with the slightest irreverence. But when he returned from imprisonment he was grave, serious and sparing of his words. He said that the good sisters who had nursed him so tenderly in the hospital so tenderly had taught him reverence. The boys of the old company rejoiced for their comrade arisen from the dead. He was a bully fireman and a great favorite. How many times had he guided the "Old Volunteer" from his place on the tongue or "spire," which was always his by virtue of his great size and strength; how many times had he helped the old tub to victory and undying fame. The flag of the company was run up to the peak, the tables were set, and soon came from the basement the united odors of the tempting chowder and the fragrant coffee. Emerson's band had been hastily summoned and the house was crowded. The night was cold and the snow lay solid on the ground. A sleigh was borrowed from Joshua Poole, four lusty firemen harnessed in, and off they started like the wind, and in a few minutes were back with their old comrade carefully wrapped up and seated in the sleigh. What a cheer went up as he was hauled in the big door, tenderly lifted out and seated at the head of the table. No one but an old boy can appreciate the hearty, exuberant welcome of the old firemen of the days gone by. There are good firemen now, and their duty is always well done, but the age of chivalry went out when steam came in and the men of today cannot realize the pathetic, the almost human affection which the true fireman felt for his machine. It was not confined to the youngster alone but was shared by staid fathers and grave men of affairs, and the writer has seen strong men sob bitterly because their darling tub was "washed" or "sucked" by a hated rival of a different make.

There was an additional cause for gladness and rejoicing that night. Another comrade was welcomed and was seated beside George Gray — brave "Bill" Andrews, the pet of the company, the ideal fireman, the gallant soldier (but as Kipling says, "That is another story"). How we listened to the tales from the lips of the two fine fellows that we loved, the one fresh from the fated fields of the Shenandoah and the fierce buffetings with Jackson's fiery legions, and the other from a rebel prison and the very jaws of death. All the old songs were sung, old scenes were recalled, the rival story tellers were on their mettle, and mirth and jollity reigned supreme. The two old comrades parted next day, one going back to his regiment and his death, the other to long weary months of helpless decrepitude. When summer came Gray was enabled to do a little work, but not at the table or work bench. Being an ingenious mechanic, and a fine "machine hand," he found employment in that capacity, until he regained a share of his old strength. Then he managed to do a little business on his own account, and success attending his efforts, he was encouraged by some men of capital and enterprise to remove to Beverly and start in the morocco business there. A large factory was built on River St. in that town, and it soon became a scene of busy industry. "Gray's factory" was the pioneer in the morocco industry and soon attracted workmen from all parts of the country, from Lynn, and Philadelphia, and Wilmington, and Newark, and the other morocco centres. Here many men now in business were taught the mysteries of the craft, amongst them Patrick J. Lynch of Lynch Brothers, now among the largest and most successful morocco manufacturer in the country. The times were booming, war prices reigned, products were becoming scarce, consumers were plenty and able to pay, and for a time George Gray was prosperous. But like most sanguine men of small capital, he spread out too much, tried to do too much business, and a disastrous collapse was the result. He was kind to his help, too kind to a few who took advantage of his guileless and unsuspecting nature. After trying various projects without success, he moved to New Hampshire, fitted up a little shop run by water power, and finished a few skins for parties in Boston. But misfortunes followed him. One morning his little son fell into the sluceway and was drowned, and shortly after his shop burned down. So, dejected, sore-hearted and weary, the poor maimed old soldier came back to Beverly amongst his friends. He eked out a scanty living for years — peddling, trying to canvas, and doing light work at his trade. His great strength visibly declined, but his kindly spirit never failed. The last time he met the writer, he urged a reunion of the old engine company; he wanted to meet the boys once more before he died. At length full of infirmities, and tired of struggling with the world he laid down his poor battered body, and calmly awaited death.

His nature was deeply religious, he had lived a simple, blameless life, he had a serene confidence in the goodness and mercy of his Creator, and he died as calmly and as peacefully as a child. With all the tenderness which should animate old friendship, this simple tribute is extended to the memory of a man who was not made callous by suffering, nor scornful by misfortune, and who freely gave his early manhood in defence of the liberties of his adopted country. "The Widder Johnsing" is the title of an entertaining dialect story which Ruth McEary Stuart will contribute to Harper's Magazine for November.

The November number of "The Season," just out, is filled with beautiful designs for the fashioning of garments for ladies and children; every garment is plainly represented in the very best manner, and for all occasions. This copy of "The Season" abounds in new and elegant wraps, mantles, jackets, and all kinds of out-door garments, both short and full length, from the short cape to the heavy traveling wrap. The costumes represented are for home-dress morning gowns; dainty negligee and afternoon toilettes, suitable for the music room, the street, or reception or home-wear; elegant theatre and ball costumes and children's garments. It has each month a large display of elegant novelties in art-work. This part of the design makes it one of the very best home journals before the public; it allows no other matter to usurp the place of its novelties in dress and home decorations. Price, 30 cents each monthly part; yearly $3.50. The International News Company, 83 & 85 Duane Street New York.

Catarrh

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed.

Stuffed-Up Feeling.
"I will say I have been troubled for several years with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best result. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother, who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble." Mrs. S. D. A Swampscott avenue woman chased her daughter-in-law elect down the avenue yesterday afternoon, brandishing a big carving knife with which she might have made mince meat of her son's wife if Officers Phelan and Mack had not opportunely appeared on the scene.

The celebrated Southern orator, Sam Small was not seen and heard at Town Hall last Sunday evening as advertised. He says he was detained at Walloston and was unable to get railroad connection. His attempts also to telephone he says proved futile as the nearest place he could get was Beverly Police station. It would seem however that the silver tongued orator could have reached here in person or by telephone if he had tried very persistently as several public places in town are connected, and an operator is on duty day and night at the Central telephone office.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed condition you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed. Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free. F. J. CHENEY, & CO., Toledo, O. Sold by druggists, 75 cts.

ELECTION ECHOES.

Governor Russell's Plurality
Will Be About 7000.

M'KINLEY WINS BY 20,000.

New York's Legislature is Very Close, but Will Probably Have a Small Democratic Majority on Joint Ballot—Boies Has a Good Majority in Iowa with a Close Legislature—Returns from Other States.
How Republican Politicians in Washington View the Elections.

BOSTON, Nov. 5.—Russell, 157,037; Allen, 151,069; Russell's plurality, 5968.
That is the result which the full vote of the state will probably show.
The prohibitory candidate for governor received 8182 votes, a decrease over former years.
The vote for auditor, while still incomplete, insures General Kimball's election by 8000 or 9000.

From the returns already in for thirty-four state senate districts it appears that the Republicans have elected twenty-three and the Democrats eleven. Consequently the Republicans will this year organize the senate with less difficulty than last year.
Of the 183 representatives so far reported the Republicans elected 115 and the Democrats sixty-eight.
This leaves fifty-seven members of the lower branch unreported. The Republicans will have a good working majority in the house, and Speaker Barrett having succeeded in overcoming the opposition to himself in Melrose and getting returned, will be re-elected speaker. Following is the

M'KINLEY'S PLURALITY

Estimated at from 15,000 to 20,000.
People's Party Takes a Big Drop.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 5.—Chairman Neal of the Democratic committee says McKin-ley's plurality will be at least 12,000 and may be 20,000, and that the Republicans have twenty-eight on joint ballot. The feature of the result is the complete drop of the People's party. Their vote in the state will not exceed 11,500. They claimed before the election at least 75,000.

Governor Campbell's Views.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 5.—Governor Campbell takes the situation philosophically and says the Democratic party was laboring under too great a handicap in Ohio because of lack of funds to pay the legiti-mate expenses of the campaign. He thinks they have made the best fight they could in the face of a Republican majority of 11,000 to start on, and the combined opposition of the manufacturers and capitalists. Besides all this, it was a life and death struggle with the Republicans. To defeat Major McKinley, one of its national leaders and the representative of its chosen idea of protection, meant the downfall and disintegration of the party itself.

Chairman Hahn's Sarcastic.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 5.—Chairman Hahn sent the following telegram to Roger Q.
Mills and Congressman Crisp:

Allow me to congratulate you on the able assistance you rendered us in the Ohio campaign. McKinley's plurality is from 19,000 to 21,000. Both branches of the general assembly are Republican by from 35 to 37 on joint ballot.
Can you be with us next year?

Governor Campbell has wired his congratulations to Major McKinley.

THE EMPIRE STATE.

Indications of a Small Democratic Majority on Joint Ballot.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—Returns from every county in the state do not materially alter the figures previously sent out.
Democratic gains were made in almost every county, but especially in the Republican strongholds.

The majority in New York city remains 59,000 in round numbers. Kings county, which includes the city of Brooklyn, gives the Democratic state ticket 15,000. The legislature is going to be very close. There are eight or ten districts in which both parties are claiming the election of its executive by exceedingly small majorities, and it will require several days, if indeed the official count, before they can be decided.

An effort to touch each of these doubtful districts seem to show that the senate is Democratic 17 to 15, and the assembly Democratic 65 to 63; total Democratic majority on joint ballot, 4. The chances favor an increase in this Democratic majority rather than a decrease.

FIGURES FROM IOWA.

Governor Boies' Majority About 10,000—
The Legislature Very Close.

WATERLOO, Ia., Nov. 5.—Governor Boies is receiving the returns with manifest satisfaction. Advice from his friends, based on returns from sixty-five counties, with estimates for the remaining thirty-four, place Boies' majority at between 9000 and 10,000. The governor is advised that the senate will stand 25 Democrats and 24 Republicans. The members of the house are about evenly divided between the two parties, with the exception of five members elected by the Union Labor and Farmers' Alliance parties.

Chairman Mack of the Republican committee concedes Boies' election by 3000 plurality, but claims the election of his disance of the Republican state ticket except railroad commissioners.

Chairman Fuller of the Democratic committee claims all the state offices, but concedes the lower house and says the senate is in doubt.

Republicans Win in South Dakota.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 5.—Reports from the congressional election in South Dakota
are very slow in coming in, but enough has been received to indicate the election of Jolly (Rep.) to congress by a good vote.
The vote for Smith (Ind.) is far below what had been claimed and conceded for him. The Democrats did little campaign work, but in many counties their vote exceeds that cast for the Independent or Alliance candidates.

Missouri Republicans Rejoice.

KANSAS CITY, Nov. 5.—In the county and judicial election the third party lost heavily in nearly every county. The Republicans are rejoicing over what they term the final downfall of the People's party in Kansas.

Pennsylvania's Vote.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—The estimated Republican pluralities in Philadelphia are 56,008 for auditor general and 53,838 for state treasurer.

Democrats Carry New Jersey.

TRENTON, Nov. 5.—Correct returns make the house stand 43 Democrats 18 Republicans; the senate, 16 Democrats, 5 Republicans.

OPINIONS FROM WASHINGTON.

What Secretaries Foster and Rusk and Attorney General Miller Think.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—Cabinet officers are chary of expressing freely their opinions on the result of the elections, but three of them yesterday made conservative statements for publication.

Secretary Foster returned to Washington from Ohio shortly after noon and was at his desk in the treasury department within a couple of hours thereafter. He is very happy over McKinley's victory. To a United Press reporter he said that the result in Ohio was a complete vindication of the protection principle.

"The McKinley bill," he said, "has worked out its own salvation. We were brave enough to fight fairly and squarely and the result proved that the people are satisfied with the bill. The Democrats made an effort to have the fight made on state issues, but we were bound that the real issue should be faced. Protection and honest money were vindicated. Campbell was badly crippled by the Democratic policy on the silver question, but that did not cause nearly so great a loss of votes to him as his free trade speeches did, and we will elect a Republican senator, too."

Secretary Rusk declares that the elections went as he expected, and he was not at all surprised. The only comment he had to make was that he would be in favor of restoring the tariff on hides. As the Massachusetts shoe manufacturers, for whose benefit hides were put on the free list, had voted with the Democrats, he believed it a good idea to make them pay more for their hides.

Attorney General Miller said he thought the Republicans had reason to be gratified at the victory in Ohio, where the national issue was fought over. In Michigan and South Dakota, he said, congressmen were elected on these issues, and if in New York
a fight had been made on national issues
the result would have been a victory for the Republicans.

The Star says: The president objects to being quoted directly, but in a general way states in conversation that the only place where national issues entered into the campaign was in Ohio, and that therefore the election of McKinley is particularly significant and gratifying. He expressed disappointment at the result in New York, but intimated that he had expected it from the moment that the campaign degenerated into a fight with Tammany as an issue. He thinks that if national issues had been kept to the front
the result would have been different.

President Polk of the Farmers' Alliance
said he was not surprised by the result.
In Ohio he saw no reason why McKinley should fail of re-election when one considered the fact that $1,000,000 in cash had been sent into Ohio to aid him in his campaign.

HIS NAME IS BLAINE.

One Republican Who Can Reclaim Doubtful Western States.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—The Enquirer, in commenting upon the election in the various states, says Blaine could carry Massachusetts next year and probably Harrison or McKinley could. In New York, however, the result must be looked upon as a defeat for President Harrison, whose personal candidate Mr. Fassett was.
The meaning of all this is that New York
Republicans want Blaine for president, and the figures show that he can carry the state. Pennsylvania, Ohio and Nebraska will support either McKinley, Harrison or Blaine. There may be more than one man, but there is certainly one. His name is Blaine.

HOW TO SUCCEED.

This is the great problem of life which few satisfactorily solve. Some fail because of poor health, others want of luck
but the majority from deficient grittance and nerve. They are nervous, irresolute, changeable, easily get the blues and "take the spirits down to keep the spirits up," thus wasting money, time, opportunity and nerve force. There is nothing like the Restorative Nerve discovered by the specialist, Dr. Miles, to cure all nervous diseases, as headache,
the blues, nervous prostration, sleeplessness, neurasthenia, St. Vitus dance, fits and hysteria. Trial bottles and fine book of testimonials free at Wm. T. Lee's.

Henry L. Betts Kills Charles F. Bliss at Peekskill, N. Y.

YANKTON, S. D., Nov. 5.—On Tuesday
Henry L. Betts of Brooklyn, N. Y., shot and killed Charles F. Bliss at Peekskill, N. Y. Cordelia Betts is a member of the Yankton divorce colony. She seeks legal separation from H. L. Betts, charging desertion. She came here five months ago with her family, including a daughter of 16 years, a son, a French maid and a governess, and has lived in seclusion. It is said that Betts killed Bliss while in a fight. Mrs. Betts would say nothing except that she was not the wife of the mur-derer and never heard of Charles F.
Bliss. The son, Charles Betts left Yankton Wednesday afternoon saying that he was going to New York. Mrs. Betts' attorney admits that she is the wife of H. L.
Betts. He said that Betts is subject to insanity and his wife has not lived with him for eight years. Three years ago Betts divided his property with her. She has borrowed money from Bliss

OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Many matters of great interest concerning schools and school management are now being discussed in educational circles, and some of these are of great importance to every community. Sooner or later some of these questions will come up in this town to be settled wisely or otherwise.

Mrs. Louisa Parsons Hopkins, school supervisor, said in a recent article: "The work of the school year is too far neutralized by the vacation of the summer. The vacations prove too long for the welfare of even the enjoyment of the children; their safety, their health, their character and the careful results are imperiled."

This she writes of Boston. Is it not wholly or partially true in Peabody? Who can wonder that children on the streets and untrained for the greater part of nine weeks should return to school work thoroughly demoralized as to order and study; and who can estimate the demoralization of character?

Many parents must regret the necessity of thus sending their little children out for such a long time, and would, no doubt, welcome some plan whereby they might be cared for a part of the time.

The remedy is the vacation, school or shorter vacations. Against the latter it may be urged that the teachers get exhausted and need the rest. On this point the last Peabody School Report well says: "If the teaching is so exhausting as to wear out a teacher in forty weeks labor, there is something wrong in the system, and the sooner a remedy is applied the better."

The vacation school is not uncommon in many cities; it is being multiplied every season and proves to be a blessing to both parents and children.

Manual training is another matter that has of late come to the front in our public school system. Of this the New England Journal of Education says: "Manual training is here to stay, and it is the part of wisdom for every teacher, principal, school officer and friend of education to make the most possible of his opportunities to guide it in the channels that shall prove to be most helpful to the public school idea, to the end that the schools may use rather than be used by it."

In this line, if sewing is good for the girls of a few classes in town, why not extend it to all classes old enough; and why should it be left to private enterprise to keep it in the schools?

And if it is wise to teach the girls to sew, why not give the boys a chance to learn something of manual training?

The Boston School Board, in order that its course of manual training in the primary grade may be successfully carried on, has placed upon each teacher's desk a copy of Mrs. Cutler's book on manual training. But this fact alone doesn't secure instruction in manual training; it is made a part of the teacher's regular work, and there is competent supervision to see that the course is followed by each teacher.

Another matter just beginning to be discussed is public school baths. These have not been established in this country yet, but money, brains, and labor might be put to a far poorer use than in helping children's bodies clean, as every public school teacher can testify.

Found Dead in a Field.

The body of Thomas Kenney, a man about 38 years of age and a resident of Northend street, was found in Square field Thursday, by some boys. Medical Examiner, Dr. George S. Osborn, after an examination of the remains, decided that death resulted from apoplexy. The body had probably been in the field about two days.

Close of the First Decade.

It was ten years last Tuesday since the unveiling of the Soldier's and Sailors' Monument upon the Square. The shaft looks as clean as the day it was first revealed to the public gaze; the base only showing any marks of time, and a little soap and water judiciously applied would restore that to its former condition. The monument is, justly, the pride of the town and commands the admiration of all sojourners from near and far by reason of its symmetry and chaste simplicity of conception. Although but $8000 were required for its erection, few shafts costing many times that amount are equally attractive and commendable in design.

Henry Grantz, of Hazelwood, Ind., has invented a unicycle or locomotive wheel about ten feet in diameter, by means of which he says he can travel eighty-three miles an hour. The rider sits within, not outside the wheel.

A Remarkable Insolvency.

In the month of August 1890, the Buxton Seed Company which had been doing business at Salem for some months as the successor of a partnership concern found itself in a cramped financial condition, and by vote of the Directors it was voluntarily petitioned into insolvency and in due time an assignee was appointed by the Court.

Substantially all of the creditors proved their claims except the firm of Joseph Breck & Sons of Boston, who refused to recognize the corporation and brought suit against the individual members of the old partnership upon a claim, which with interest aggregated about $1600, in the Superior Court at Boston.

F. G. Preston of this town and Edgar R. Champlin of Boston were retained by the defendants to resist the claim, and the case was tried before an Auditor at Boston, the trial occupying several days. The report of the Auditor has just been filed with the Clerk of the Court, in which he finds that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the sum claimed, and the corporation if anybody was responsible for the debt.

The reason for the suit appears to have been the insolvency of the corporation; but it now transpires that the insolvent corporation has held its meeting for proving claims, dividend amounting to one hundred cents on a dollar have been declared and paid, and the Assignee finds the sum of $505.50 remaining in his hands and he has petitioned the Court that a decree be granted allowing him to pay the balance to the corporation, of which Simon P. Buxton of this town is the chief stockholder.

Thus the unique spectacle is presented of an insolvent corporation paying all its debts and dividing a surplus. Similar cases may exist in history, but if so they are extremely rare and not generally known.

The Captain of an Ocean Steamship.

The captain of an Atlantic liner is responsible for the ship and the safety of the passengers, and is always on duty and in charge of the ship. When he lays the course it is never altered without his command, unless it be for a slight variation to prevent a collision. And in such emergencies, even if he is notified so quickly that he is always on the bridge almost as soon as the ship answers her helm. The captain always makes the reckoning of the day's run. All the officers on the bridge take their own observations, but the captain does the official figuring. The captain also keeps the ship's log. In addition to all his other duties, Capt. Watkins of the city of Paris makes it a point to cruise about among the saloon passengers and to see to it personally that they are made comfortable. In this respect he differs largely from most captains, who seem to confine themselves solely to the business of sailing the ship and are seldom seen with the passengers except at meal time, and then only at intervals.—New York Sun.

DO YOU LOVE YOUR CHILD?

Grace Gilman lives in Dexter, Me., and she is the light of her little home. A short time ago she began to fail. The glow of health left her cheeks—they became colorless. She grew nervous. Could not sleep well. Would groan and cry out in her sleep for hours at a time. No appetite. The Death Angel drew near, but the first-aid medicine, DANA'S SARSAPARILLA, gave her a good appetite, brought the roses back to her cheeks and gave her refreshing sleep and the father and mother are very grateful for it. Do you wonder at it?

Hearts are breaking with agony every day as the little arms clasp papa's and mama's for the last time.

Dedication of the Library.

The dedication of Middleton public library occurred Wednesday afternoon at Town Hall. An address was made by Mr. Samuel A. Fletcher of the Board of Trustees, giving a sketch of the origin of the undertaking.

The first money contributed was in 1879, when the late Hon. Charles L. Flint gave $1000 as a nucleus. A library association owning 1000 volumes had previously existed since 1865 supported by assessments, and at the time of Mr. Flint's donation the library and furniture were also presented to the town. Books have been added at various times by gift of sundry parties and on the death of Mr. Flint in 1889 he bequeathed $10,000 for a library building and $5000 additional to yield an income for purchase of books. The town also appropriated money making a total of $14,219.25.

Ansel B. Tyler accepted the the keys as a symbolical delivery to the town with appropriate remarks.

Sealing the Palisades in an Elevator. The largest passenger elevators ever constructed have just been set up at Weehauken N. J.—the old dueling ground of Burr and Hamilton, by the same firm that supplied the Eiffel tower elevator, for the Rapid Transit Railway company. The design of elevator is to convey passengers from the landing on the Hudson to the top of the Palisades in order to connect with the lines crossing those table lands to the Hackensack side.

The capacity of the cages, which are three in number, is 130 persons each and the speed attainable is 400 feet per minute, although about 200 feet will be the average speed employed, making the total ascent of 153 feet from the river to the crest of the cliffs a matter of but 45 seconds. So perfect too is the system of handling, the cages can be emptied and refilled for descent, in 30 seconds. Passengers pass out to the trains from an exit on one side, and take their places, in succession, through an entrance on the opposite side.

These elevators are two and half times the size of the largest ever operated, which is located in New York city, and has a capacity of 50 passengers.

The power used is hydraulic pressure primarily created by steam condensing pumps of the Worthington make. The safety clutches are of unique device and have been subjected to tests that prove their efficiency beyond a doubt.

CHAPTER VIII.

After dinner, therefore, feeling ridiculously weak, Derwent passed out of his room for the first time since he had entered it, and found himself in the court he had so often admired. Under the great arch of a passage which led to the front of the house, and of another which led to a second court behind, hung large and brilliant lamps, the light of which was reflected in the basin of the fountain that occupied the center of the patio, while about it were grouped wide-leaved tropical plants in terra cotta pots of native manufacture. Around the court a broad, tiled gallery ran, supported by pillared arches, under which there were glimpses of various apartments. One of these was the dining room, and its open doors revealed a table still covered with the remains of dessert—stands piled high with beautiful fruit, tall, slender wine bottles and cut glass liquor decanters gleaming in the light of low swinging lamps.

Following Ramon's noiseless tread, Derwent passed to where wide glass doors showed a large and lofty apartment, which charmed his eye at once by its picturesque grace and comfort. And yet, with the exception of a few articles of foreign luxury, it was such a room as might be found in any house belonging to a family of means throughout Mexico, and had a beauty independent of its furnishing, in its noble proportions, its floor of glazed tiles that reflected like a mirror every object placed upon it, and the delicate arabesques traced upon its plastered walls. Over the shining floor were scattered eastern rugs, interspersed with the silky white fleece of the angora goat and the handsome spotted fur of the Mexican tiger cat.

A variety of low, luxurious couches—distinctly European, these—were mingled with easy chairs of inviting form. There was an upright piano, with a scarf of Japanese silk of softly blended colors thrown across its top, a long, low bookcase filled with volumes, and various tables, on almost all of which bowls and vases of flowers stood, while the whole was lighted by two lamps of Moorish design which hung from the ceiling by long silver chains. Altogether simple as these things would have been in a different place, it was not such an apartment as one would, without warning, have expected to find under the shadow of the Sierra Madre; and Derwent's surprise was excusable as he stood for a moment motionless on the threshold.

"I am very glad to see you, señor," said Ramon, pushing wider yet the open doors. He glanced around. "Ah! the señorita," he said, as a lady rose and advanced from the farther end of the long room.

As she came toward him it seemed to Derwent as if he had not before had the least idea of her surpassing beauty. Not even in the Alameda of Mexico, when she walked past him like a princess, draped in rich black lace, had he fully recognized the perfection of her loveliness. But here it fairly dazzled him. The foreign, semi-oriental room, with its shadowy corners and the circles of shining light from its hanging lamps, made an harmonious background for the graceful figure that, clad in soft white India silk clasped by a silver girdle at the waist and fitting high to the throat, under a silver collar wrought with the fairylike delicacy of Mexican work, moved over the polished floor with the ease of a grande dame and held out a slender hand to him.

"I am very glad to see you, señor," she said with gentle graciousness, "and more than glad that you have recovered sufficiently to be able to join us. Pray take this chair."

With her own hands she moved forward a large wicker chair, fitted with soft cushions of crimson silk, and Derwent was glad to sink into it, with a murmured apology, while she sat down on a divan opposite and looked at him with her dark, beautiful eyes full of solicitude.

"You are very pale," she said. "Shall I not send Ramon—who still lingered at the door—for a glass of wine?"

"Oh, no, thanks," he answered. "You are very kind, but I am only a little weak. I have felt more weakness from my wound than would have been the case had I not lost so much blood," he added apologetically.

"And then the fever," she said. "Considering both these things, I think you have made great strides toward recovery. It was only a week yesterday since you were brought into the house insensible—we almost thought a dying man."

"I owe you many excuses for making such a sensational entrance," he said smiling. "It must be very unpleasant to have an apparently dying man brought without any warning to your door. But then what would have become of me if the señor, your father, had not met and succored me in the most truly Samaritan fashion? I am afraid the dying would soon have become a grim fact."

"There is a strong probability of it," she answered; "and therefore we are very grateful for the chance that brought you here. It has been a great pleasure to do what we could for you, and to know that you were getting better."

"What should I have been made of if I did not get better?" he said. "It is the only way in which I can show my appreciation of your great kindness."

"Let us not talk of that," she said with a slight wave of the hand. "Our kindness is nothing. In Mexico it is not considered remarkable to show hospitality to any one—especially to a wounded stranger. The remarkable thing would be if one failed in it. But probably you do not know Mexico well, señor?"

He perceived that she wished to change the subject, and followed her lead at once. "No," he answered, "I cannot say that I know Mexico well, but I have at least the desire to know it better. The mere idea of the country always exercised a great fascination over me."

"Then you did not think of us as barbarians, as I have been told that the most of your countrymen do?" she said smiling.

"The most of my countrymen are very ignorant of Mexico, señorita," he replied, "but I really do not think their ignorance leads them as far as that."

"Does it not?" she said, rather incredulously. "I have heard that in the states Mexico is considered a barbarous country. It is a little singular, is it not, that in Europe no such idea exists with regard to us?"

"Europe knows you better," he answered. "Up to the present time all Mexico's social and commercial intercourse has been with Europe rather than with her immediate neighbor. There was very good reason for this, as you know. I have no excuse to make for my countrymen, señorita. The grasping propensities of the Anglo-Saxon are, unfortunately, well known. And the narrow minded vanity which induces him to fancy himself the exemplar of the human race is not less remarkable."

"You are not very complimentary to your countrymen," she said, showing her pearly teeth in another smile.

"Why should I be complimentary?" he asked. "Why should not one try to clear one's mind even of natural prejudice and get as near the truth as possible in this very imperfect world? Every race has its defaults de ses qualites. But it is a great mistake to confound the defects with the virtues."

"Yes," she said meditatively, "that is very true. Mexicans have undoubtedly some defects, although I really think—and it is not only because I too am a Mexican—that they have also great virtues."

"Even from the little that I have seen of them, I am very sure of it," said Derwent heartily. "But you, señorita, can hardly consider yourself altogether a Mexican."

"I do, however," she said lifting her head a little higher with a pride that became it well. "I am a Mexican in heart and soul, as well as in blood and birth. It is true that my dear father comes of another race; but he will tell you that he is altogether Mexican now."

"I am glad that he has at least not laid aside his knowledge of English, and that you condescend to speak it also," said Derwent smiling.

"But here comes one who does not," said the young lady rising.

Derwent rose, too, as an elderly lady entered the room. He knew her at once as Dona Zarifa's companion when he saw the latter in the Alameda—a handsome, middle aged woman, very brunette and inclined to embonpoint, as all Spanish women are after a certain age. With a few words of greeting she held out a soft, kindly hand to Derwent, who bowed over it.

"This is my cousin, Senora Peralta," said Dona Zarifa. "She hopes you are recovering. If you speak French you can answer her in that language."

Derwent did speak French with fluency, so he answered Senora Peralta's inquiry, and then, in reply to other questions, gave a circumstantial history of his wound and all relating to it. Both ladies listened to him attentively, and the subject was hardly exhausted when Don Maurizio came in.

"Ah, Mr. Derwent," he said cordially, "I am delighted to see you here. You look better already. A little society is a good thing; although I must warn you that we can offer you very little variety in that line at Miraflores."

Derwent replied very sincerely that it was impossible to desire better society than he found at Miraflores. "But I have heard," he said, "that most Mexican proprietors of large estates do not live on them, because of their loneliness."

"It is, unfortunately, true," answered his host. "The estates are generally so large, and the distances from one to another so great, that wealthy Mexicans do not, as a rule, live on their haciendas, except for a few weeks in the course of the year."

"That is what I was told when I expressed a desire to see something of life on a hacienda," said Derwent. "No body lives on the haciendas but the agents," I was assured. "There is no life there of the kind you fancy. Mexicans of the higher class all live in the capital or abroad."

"Allowing for the exceptions," said Don Maurizio, "that was a correct statement. And the consequence is that half the haciendas of Mexico are for sale, destined before long to pass into the hands of aliens. When men leave their estates in the control of agents the result is mismanagement in all respects. Who knows this better than an Irishman? Absenteeism has been the curse of my country, and it is in a great degree the curse of Mexico. So when I became a Mexican I determined that I would not follow the prevailing fashion. Great estates came into my hands, and I resolved at once to administer them myself. I have done so for twenty years, and I am rather proud of the result."

"And you have not found it very irksome to live on a hacienda?"

"I cannot understand how a man can find anything irksome which is in the clear line of duty and which affords abundant occupation for his hands and head. I have found infinite pleasure as well as infinite employment in my life. An Irishman from Galway naturally loves everything connected with a free outdoor life, and I have taught my daughter to love it as well as I do myself. She is an enthusiastic horsewoman, and we live in the saddle half our time. By the by, if you like riding I can give you a good mount."

Derwent's eyes brightened. "I am a southerner," he said, as if that were answer enough. "Half of my life I have spent in Louisiana and half in the blue grass region of Kentucky—my mother belonging to the first and my father to the last. Not even in Galway do you think more of riding than we do."

"And in neither are there such plains over which to ride as in Mexico, I am sure," said Dona Zarifa. "Ah, it is like flying through the air to put one's horse at his best speed and ride for miles over our great mesas."

Her delicate nostrils dilated as if she inhaled the breezes sweeping over the wide leagues of space of which she spoke, and Derwent, looking at her, felt a quick thrill at the thought that he might be permitted some day to ride by her side.

"And you really, then, spend all of your time here?" he asked, addressing Don Maurizio.

"Here at Miraflores? Oh, no," that gentleman replied. "I have another large hacienda in the Bajio—you know that stretch of fertile country between Irapuato and Queretaro? I divide my time between that place and this, with a month or two now and then in Mexico. But, rich, productive and beautiful, too as the Bajio is, both my daughter and myself prefer this wilder country; and if we were called upon to name our home, I think we should say Miraflores."

"Without doubt," said Dona Zarifa. "There is no place in the world so dear to me as this."

"That is very good for a girl who is fresh from a season in Paris, is it not?" said Don Maurizio, as he laid his hand caressingly on her wrist.

She placed her other hand over his, and looked up at him with her dark eyes melting into a more liquid softness than they had known before. "You were not in Paris," she said, with an enchanting smile.

"No, thank heaven!" he answered gaily. "What should a Mexican hacienda, with his heart among his flocks and herds, do there? But go, carina mia, and give us some music. Let Mr. Derwent see what he thinks of our Mexican airs."

She rose instantly and moved across the floor—a perfect picture of grace, Derwent thought, in her soft, shimmering draperies, and with her natural, unstudied charm of step and bearing. Sitting down to the piano, she struck a few chords and began to sing in a contralto so rich and sweet that it was like notes drawn from a violin by a master hand rather than the sounds of the human voice. What she sang her listener did not know—the words were Spanish—but the air was wild, haunting, mournful, and yet passionate in the extreme. As he listened he seemed to see the rugged mountain passes, the great Sierras like storm tossed waves, the vast expanse of mighty plains, the sad, gentle faces and passionate eyes of the people; then the strain sank to a lower key, a tender sweetness stole into it, as though tropical flowers were breathing their fragrance out on the starry night, and with one last burst of sad, strange melody it ended.

"Oh, yes, it is Mexican," said Don Maurizio—"one of the wild native airs that linger among the people and that are now and then caught and formulated by the composers."

"What did it say to you, señor?" asked Zarifa, turning around.

He told what it had suggested, and she smiled as if pleased. "A girl is relating how her lover has been killed among the wild mountains, and how her own heart is broken," she said. "At the close she wanders back to memories of their love, of how in the summer night he would come and sing beneath her window. Then she remembers that he is dead, and ends with a cry of despair."

"A very mournful motif," said Don Maurizio. "Give us something a little more cheerful, and then I will play physician and order Mr. Derwent to bed."

"Sing an 'Ave Maria,' my child," said a quiet voice at the door; and as Derwent looked in that direction he saw a tall, slender man, wearing the cassock of a priest, enter the room.

"This is a member of our family group whom you would have met earlier if he had not been absent until today," said Don Maurizio; "our good friend and chaplain, Padre Francisco."

There was something very charming in the dark, gentle face, with finely outlined features and soft brown eyes that looked at Derwent with a smile as they shook hands.

"I am grieved to hear of your accident, señor," he said in very good English. "As Don Maurizio has remarked, I have been away for two weeks, else I should have expressed my regret sooner. But you are getting well!"

Derwent replied suitably, and then turning to Dona Zarifa, said, "I hope that, since I am under orders to retire, señorita, you will sing at least one more song before I go."

"I will sing the 'Ave Maria' for which el padre has asked," she replied. "I think you will like that."

Derwent was very sure of it, when he heard the strains of Cherubini's "Ave Maria." Often as he had heard this beautiful song before, it was always in a soprano arrangement, and he thought that he had never appreciated its exquisite harmonies until he heard them rendered by Dona Zarifa's rich contralto tones. She sang it like a prayer; and the noble strains lingered in his ear long after he said good night and retired to his chamber.

They haunted him after he had laid his head on his pillow. Still in his memory vibrated the full, mellow notes of the enchanting voice, and before his eyes floated a picture of the silken draped form, with its silver ornaments, and the beautiful face out of which shone the

The scheme is characterized on all hands, as ruinous to American leather interests.

TREMONT TEMPLE presented a lively and interesting scene yesterday, at the opening of great dual convention of the World's and National Woman's Christian Temperance Unions.

Grouped about Miss Willard, president of both unions, sat representatives from all parts of the world, including the South Sea Islands.

IN OUR Dramatic and Musical column will be found a description of the War Allegory to be presented at Boston in aid of the Grant Monument fund. It will be found especially interesting to Grand Army men.

WE CONGRATULATE our neighboring town of Middleton upon the final establishment of its public library. We who have enjoyed the fruits of Mr. Peabody's munificence should know how to appreciate such a blessing.

WE PUBLISH today two contributed articles, one devoted to education and the other dealing with the memories associated with the tablets in the corridor of Town Hall, on which are inscribed the names of heroes of the late war who served in the quota of Peabody, or South Danvers, as it was then called.

A RIOT occurred in a French Baptist church at Montreal, on Wednesday evening, caused by a lecture of an apostate priest who used harsh terms in relation to the nuns and confessionals. The disturbance was made by a party of French catholic students who attended in a body. It was with great difficulty the police, aided by protestant students succeeded in dispersing the rioters.

THE NEWLY organized government of Chili is commencing to get state matters straightened out, and settling down to business.

The turmoil of war is over and functions of the temporary government have come to an end.

Chili will soon settle down to every day life, and a few months will obliterate the remembrance of her late struggles, at least among all peoples except her own.

THE IDEA of absolute secrecy which has attached the Massachusetts Australian ballot has been exploded by a clever device which came to light in Boston at the election of last week, when by challenging a man's vote, which necessitated his endorsing his name upon his ballot, and afterward demanding a recount, it became perfectly easy to ascertain just whom that individual voted for.

We do not claim that the Boston case, was a deliberate attempt to ascertain for whom the voter cast his ballot, but the episode certainly furnished a suggestion of how the law may be evaded in isolated cases.

Of course it would be impracticable to work any such dodge as a means of detecting all influenced voters, but the knowledge that such a thing is possible furnishes a trammel that the law never intended should disturb the voter's mind and would tend to make vote purchases more on matter of certainty if that should be desired in preference to paying voters to stay away from the polls.

It is pretty difficult for one man to devise a law that another cannot circumvent.

Endorsed By Both Parties.

Among the visitors in Beverly Thursday was Postmaster Thomas H. Jackman of Peabody. Mr. Jackman is a Democrat, but so popular has been his administration of affairs that he is heartily endorsed by both parties, and Gen. Cogswell will probably be asked by the citizens to secure his reappointment.—Beverly Times.

Clerk—Mr. Slacher is out here, and wants to pay you $10 on account. Cutter the tailor—Tell him I'm out. But I thought he owed you about $200? So he does; but if I accept the $10 he'll be around next day to get another suit on the strength of the payment!

ONLY ONE Sarsaparilla sold on the "No Benefit, No Pay" plan—only one could stand the test, viz: DANA'S.

A Story from the Tablets.

The history of the war has been written from many standpoints. It is still being written, and will continue to be the theme of historians and story tellers for generations to come. Every soldier can tell a tale of interest. The contest was waged on a scale so colossal the theatre presented so vast a stage, and such a myriad of actors, that every scene depicted has an interest and a freshness of its own. While stately fleets did not sail the ocean and maneuver and fight on traditional lines yet our naval operations were conducted with a genius and magnitude commensurate to the occasion. The first shot fired from the Monitor shattered the "Wooden walls" of the entire world and the wind of the first rifled projectile that pierced the sides of the Alabama swept into oblivion all the cherished traditions of ages. The immense sea coast and the multifarious rivers, required all the energy and ingenuity which naval skill could devise, and the triumphs of the flag were witnessed from the waters of Boulogne to the harbor of Bahia.

The stories of the leaders will be told, but who shall tell of the deeds of quiet heroism, the men of rank and file whom we meet every day, and of the thousands who silently did their duty and died in doing it. That serious man who has just passed could tell if he would of the awful carnage at the bloody angle when his eye blazed with the light of battle; the tall stooping figure who sat beside you in the horse-car, led the forlorn hope at Port Hudson, and the white haired old gentleman you met in the post office, captured a gun when Farragut tore through the obstructions and sailed in triumph up Mobile bay. When peace came, they returned to their families and—their work. No parade, no swagger. The better soldier, the better citizen.

It was a sultry morning in the early sixties that a little group of men stood at the corner at the old post office on the square. The branch train had just gone by and the smoke hung lazily in the air. The rumbling tan cart went jolting along, for business had become brisk both from the scarcity of laborers and the enormous waste and consumption of the army, and the foundation of many a fortune was laid in these times. The coxey little peddle was then unthought of, and the traveller put up with the meagre comforts of the old run that stood at the crossing on Wallis street. There was no stately monument to attract the attention of the wayfarer, for its graceful shaft, with its crowning figure of Liberty still slumbered unheeded in its rocky bed. The great town hall with its swelling and pretentious bulk was but a dream of the future, but the tall flag-staff which was dedicated with much ceremony not long before, then reared its height on the centre of the Square. It had become a beacon to the people during the war, and when the flag floated cheerily from the topmost peak, it meant glad tidings and victory, when drooping at half mast—sorrow and disaster. So that "while many an eye has danced to see that banner in the sky," many a heart has stood still in apprehension as it slowly ascended, quivered a moment and stood still midway to the peak.

The little group on the corner paused in their conversation, to watch the figure of a man as he slowly walked from his house, down Foster street, bearing a bulky bundle under his arm. His movements were more deliberate than usual, and his ruddy countenance was overspread with unwonted gravity. The men knew his mission and they feared it portended sorrow to some heart. By common consent he had become the guardian of the flag, and tended it with a devotion that was pathetic, so that every eye turned towards it for good or evil tidings. As he fastened the haliards, and with trembling hands prepared to raise the banner, that was soon to be a symbol of his own sorrow in the death of his brave boy, a tall Irishman left the group and walked rapidly towards him.

"There was a battle Mr. Shackley, was the 19th in?"

"It was."

"Who are you hoisting the flag for, any of the boys killed?"

"Yes."

"Who is it?"

"Your son!"

Entering the corridor of the town hall, look well down the inner right hand tablet—Patrick Scannell—18. You have the story.

Dr. John E. Owen, the Medical Director of the Exposition has promised Mrs. Potter Palmer that women shall receive official recognition upon the medical staff. The number to be appointed has not yet been announced, but assurance has been given that women physician will professionally rank equal with men, and share the duties of the Exposition hospital.

ESSEX COUNTY.

A recount of the votes of Haverhill for Senator from the 4th Essex District made a net gain of 3 votes for Brickett (Dem.) A count in other towns in the district will take place. The vote in the district stood: E. P. Shaw (Rep) of Newburyport, 3826; B. F. Brickett (Dem) of Haverhill, 3809, giving a plurality of 17 for Shaw.

The Lynn Board of Trade has elected Elihu B. Hayes its secretary. He assumes the duties of the office at once. The Board will open rooms on the second floor of the First National Bank building on Exchange street, and will begin an aggressive campaign in the upbuilding of Lynn, and the stimulation of its business growth.

Rev. George H. Reed was installed pastor of the North Church at Haverhill on Tuesday afternoon. The programme was—Sermon, Prof. I. F. Stearns of the Theological Seminary, Bangor, Me.; charge to the pastor, Rev. Arthur Little, D. D., Boston; charge to people, Rev. J. W. Bixler, New London, Conn.; right hand fellowship, Rev. E. C. Of Course It's a Woman.

"The maid that rocks the cradle is the hand that rocks the world."

The mother, sitting beside and rocking the cradle, often singing her sad lullaby, may be thus shaping, as it were the destinies of nations. But if diseases, consequent on motherhood, have borne her down, and sapped her life, how mournful will be her song. To cheer the mother, brighten her song, Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, has, after long experience compounded a remedy which he has called his "Favorite Prescription," because ladies preferred it to all others. He guarantees it to cure nervousness, neuralgia, pains, bearing-down pains, irregularities, weakness, or prolapsus; headache, backache, or any of the ailments of the female organs. What he asks, is that the ladies shall give it a fair trial, and satisfaction is assured. Money refunded, if it doesn't give satisfaction.

He Did Not Call.

The man who tried Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and was sure of the 500 reward offered by the proprietors for an incurable case, never called for his money. Why not? O, because he got cured! He was sure of two things: (1) That his catarrh could not be cured. (2) That he would have that $500. He is now sure of one thing, and that is, that his catarrh is gone completely. So he is cut $500, of course. The makers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy have faith in their ability to cure the worst cases of Nasal Catarrh, no matter of how long standing, and attest their faith by their standing reward of $500, offered for many years past, for an incurable case of loathsome and dangerous disease. The Remedy is sold by druggists, at only 50 cents. Mild, soothing, cleansing, deodorizing, antiseptic, and healing.

Catarrh

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed.

Stuffed-Up Feeling.

"I will say I have been troubled for several years with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best result. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother, who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble." Mrs. S. D. The High School closed yesterday to allow the teachers to attend the Teacher's Institute at Salem under direction of the State Board of Education.

Holten Lodge of Odd Fellows has engaged special cars to convey them to Salem Wednesday evening, where they attend the anniversary celebration of Fraternity Lodge. Cars leave the Square at 7.30 o'clock.

Officer John J. Sweeney is just finishing a good-looking, substantial two and one-half story double tenement house on Tremont street, and will occupy one of the tenements this week. James F. Connors, of Connors & Tracey, will move into the other one.

As the sun is superior to the stars, so DANA'S is superior to all other Sarsaparillas.

The base of the chimney for the electric light station is twelve feet square and is the largest in town. Work on the chimney is being pushed forward rapidly and the underpinning of the building is being pushed as fast as possible in order to have it completed before the cold weather sets in.

An interest is being revived in roller skating, some two hundred or more people having attended the rink every evening since it opened this season.

The busiest people in Peabody are the furniture movers, who report that there were never so many families moving out of town as at present.

On Tuesday evening, Dec. 8, the Brookside Club, will give an entertainment in the vestry of the South church consisting of illustrated poems. The talent will all be furnished from the membership. Familiar poems will be selected, and the illustration will be given in tableaux.

There was a slight fire at Upton's Glue yards on Thursday night.

Mr. W. B. Abbott Secy. of the Salem Young Men's Christian Association will speak at the evening service at South Church vestry tomorrow evening at 7 o'clock.—He will have something of especial interest to say to young men. There will be choral singing. All are cordially invited to attend.

Rev. George A. Hall will occupy the pulpit of South Church at the regular morning service tomorrow.

A C. Dodge has been appointed superintendent of the Essex Electric Street Railway, in place of Mr. Casb. The new official is a man better acquainted with the details of electric roads than his predecessor, who was brought up as a horse railroad man exclusively.

Commencing Monday, the cars on the Essex road will run as follows: first car leaves Salem at 6 A. M. and Peabody at 6.30 A. M. and make half hour trips thereafter until noon, beginning twenty minute trips at 12.20 and continuing until 10 o'clock. The last two trips being 10.30 and 11 o'clock from Peabody. Sunday trips will be run half hourly from 9 A. M. until 10.30 P. M. The first car leaving Salem at 8.30 and the last car leaving Peabody at 10.30.

Rev. O. P. Gifford lectured in the free course at the Institute on Thursday evening on the Problem of Life.

Simon P. Buxton made an exhibit of flowers at the Lynn Floriculture Exhibition which attracted much attention and won him favorable mention.

W. E. Francis, formerly of this town who was a candidate for the office of treasurer of Harvey county, Kansas, in the recent election, on the People's party ticket, ran over 300 votes ahead of his ticket but was defeated by his Republican opponent by a little over 100 in a poll of over 3000.

A benefit dance was given last evening for Thomas Cuddire who was injured at Lynn a few weeks ago, by a shaving machine.

Mrs. Delia Etta B., wife of Isaac E. Jackman, whose maiden name was Parsons, died at her residence 31 Oak street, on Thursday evening. Her health had been gradually failing for about two years, her ailment being a complication of diseases although she kept about until the last. She leaves four children. Her age was 38 years and 5 months. The funeral takes place tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock from her late residence.

The Annual Exhibition of the "Queen of Autumn" flowers and Chrysanthemum opened Tuesday in Horticultural Hall, 100 Tremont Street Boston. Nearly one thousand dollars will be awarded as prizes. The exhibition closes at 10 P M and should be seen by all. Admittance is but 25 cents.

Mrs. Susan P., wife of Joseph G. Lord died at her residence on Lowell street on Monday at the age of 79 years 6 months, of neuralgia of the heart.

Joseph String was committed to the County Truant School at Lawrence on Tuesday.

About thirty-five veterans responded to the call published last Saturday in the PRESS to meet at Ashland Hall. A new association was formed with Thomas Carroll president, George P. Ferguson vice president, Horace Holt secretary and H. J. G. Kimball financial secretary. A committee was appointed to complete the organization. If it were possible, the old "Volunteer" would be purchased and kept by the society as a memento of the Torrent is, but money will not buy the old tub, so it is proposed to buy some other machine and "wash" the Torrent in the League contests.

Rev. Frederick Pember is giving excellent satisfaction to the members and attendants of St. Paul's church. The meetings have been very fully attended of late.

A citizen of Peabody who visited the Lawrence, County Truant School recently, speaks highly of the management and appearance of the institution. Children of this town recognized the gentleman and spoke favorably of the treatment received. There are about 55 boys in the school at present.

Resignation of the Postmaster.

Quite a sensation was created Wednesday morning by the announcement of the resignation of Col. J. F. Dalton, Postmaster at Salem, and the nomination of W. Harvey Merrill, senior partner of the well known firm of Merrill & Mackintire to the vacancy.

Outside a very narrow circle, no intimation of the event had forewarned the public mind.

Col. Dalton was appointed by President Hayes to succeed George H. Peirson, in 1876 and has held the office continuously since that time, being reappointed by Presidents Arthur and Harrison.

When he assumed the duties of the position, the office was located in the Asiatic building and employed six letter carriers, a female stamp clerk and three male clerks.

The increase of general business in the city has developed the office, so that there are now employed fourteen carriers and six clerks and in some parts of the city there are six deliveries a day. The business was removed by Col. Dalton to the Endicott Building, where it now is, and many improvements were added enhance the public service as well as for the convenience of the employees.

Col. Dalton has been in ill health for several years and has repeatedly been advised by his friends and physician to lay down the burden of the office but until the present time has tried to pull through until such time as his health should be better.

Carrier's Anniversary.

The first of November completed the first year of the mail carrier service in Peabody.

The service was inaugurated, with William Beckett, Joseph F. Wiggin, W. A. Smith and Arthur Elliot as regular carriers and Samuel Watts substitute. Mr. Smith was unable to stand the physical strain of the constant tramp and resigned at the end of four weeks when Samuel Watts was appointed in his place, and Flavel H. Goodwin was appointed substitute.

In June of the present year Mr. Goodwin was appointed as an additional carrier covering the route in the suburbs with a mail gig, and at his promotion, special Delivery Messenger Author E. Jackman was appointed substitute and performed about the only active duties devolving upon that office, while the regular carriers were on their vacations during the summer months.

The receipts of the office are constantly increased by the extra business but not with standing the extra labor entailed, the service both of carriers and in the various other departments has always been a subject of favorable comment.

Since Postmaster Jackman's term of service commenced over four years ago there has never been a retrograde move, but progress, on the contrary has marked his administration. He has labored faithfully to give the public the best service that can be demanded of a town the size of Peabody, and his efforts have been crowned with abundant success. Through his untiring efforts, at the same time the carrier service was inaugurated, the office was removed from the cramped and inconvenient quarters in which Postmaster Ward had located to the commodious quarters in Allen's Block, where everybody holding lock on call boxes, is enabled to get mail matter without the delay and annoyance incident to the old location. A number of extra mails have also been added through his efforts.

Public sentiment, regardless of politics, is unanimously in favor of Postmaster Jackman, and it is the general opinion that if ever a cause existed for the application of civil service rules, they should by all means be applied to the postoffice.

The inauguration of the carrier service was hastened by many months through the direct efforts of Mr. Jackman and his assistants. At the time the census was being taken, it became known to the postmaster that certain families had been skipped by the enumerators, and immediately he set about to have the omitted families placed upon the rolls, and pushing his enquiries still further he succeeded in hunting up enough people that had been overlooked by the enumerators, to carry the census of Peabody from 9985, which would have deprived the town of the carrier service, to 10,153, and the service was assured, and thus several thousands of dollars were diverted from other channels through which they were flowing out of town and caused to be distributed among our own townsmen.

The postoffice corps has for sometime intended celebrating the first anniversary and it would have been done upon that day, but being impossible, it was decided to fix upon Tuesday of the present week, and accordingly on that evening, the entire force of mail employees, including the special messenger, Lester Chisholm, sat down to a fine banquet in Temperance hall, spread by caterer H. G. Robbins, and a royal love feast they had.

It was a sort of family affair—no one outside the thirteen officials being at the festive board, except the omnipresent representatives of the press.

"It is said that God never made two men alike." "Of course he didn't, or you would never hear of a woman being married twice."

by local applications, as they cannot reach the deceased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed condition you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed. Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free. F. J. CHENEY, & CO., Toledo, O. Sold by druggists, 75 cts.

ESSEX SS. PROBATE COURT. To Daniel Goodwin, of Peabody, in said County.

WHEREAS, complaint has been made to said Court, by the Selectmen of the town of Peabody, in said County, and Sarah A. Spaulding of said Peabody, that in their judgment, you do, by drinking, gaming, idleness, so spend, waste, and lessen your estate, as to expose yourself and family to want or suffering; and do thereby expose said town of Peabody to charge or expense for your and their support; and praying that Willard Spaulding of said Peabody, or some other suitable person may be appointed your Guardian, agreeably to the law in such case made and provided.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be held at Salem, in and for said county of Essex, on the first Monday of December next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why a Guardian should not be appointed as aforesaid.

And said Selectmen are hereby directed to cause said Daniel Goodwin to be notified of the time and place appointed for the hearing of said complaint, by serving him with a copy of this order, fourteen days at least, before said Court, if he can be found within said Commonwealth; and if he cannot be so found, by publishing this citation in the Peabody Press, a newspaper printed at Peabody, once a week for three weeks, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, Rollin E. Harmon, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this sixth day of November, in the year eighteen hundred and ninety-one.

REMARKABLE FACTS.

Heart disease is supposed to be incurable, but when properly treated a large proportion of cases can be cured. Thus Mrs. Elmira Hatch, of Elkhart, Ind., and Mrs. Mary L. Baker, of Ovid, Mich., were cured after suffering 20 years. S.
C. Linburger, druggist at San Jose, Ill., says that Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, which cured the former, "worked wonders for his wife." Levi Logan, of Buchanan, Mich., who had heart disease for 30 years, says two bottles made him feel like a new man. Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is sold by Wm. T. Lee. Book of wonderful testimonials free.

Bruin Holds the Orchard.
The Hon. Isaac Bearce, of Meddy-bemps, has a fine orchard, perhaps the finest in this county. It is situated some distance from his house in a thick growth of woods. Isaac, with his two hired men, went to gather apples recently.
They discovered a large bear in possession, and at last accounts he had refused to retreat. He was making sad havoc among the fruit.—Cor. Bangor News.

The Husband Should Be Boss.
Judge Finletter, in charging the jury
in a case tried in common pleas court, gave an opinion emphatically sustaining
the rights of husbands to rule their homes.

The suit was that of John Yates against Christiana F. M. Greaves, brought to recover damages for false arrest and malicious prosecution. Miss Greaves boarded in Yates' house. She was ordered by him to leave, but Mrs.
Yates, to whom Miss Greaves paid her board, told her to stay. Yates subsequently, upon coming home, quarreled with his wife and, it is alleged, choked
her, and when Miss Greaves interfered, it is alleged, he threatened her. The next morning Mrs. Yates went with Miss Greaves to a magistrate's office,
where the latter swore out a warrant charging Yates with threatening her life. He was locked up, and spent the night in a station house.

Miss Greaves did not appear against Yates the next day and he was discharged, but in her behalf it was alleged that her nonappearance was due to a solicitation by Yates' brother-in-law, who said that he couldn't get bail. After his release Yates brought the present suit against Miss Greaves.

Judge Finletter said that Miss Greaves should have obeyed the direction of Yates to leave. She had no right to remain in the house against his wish. The jury would therefore have to find a verdict for the plaintiff. In arriving at the damages they should consider the condition in life of the parties, but in finding for the plaintiff they should not "fix their verdict for him for a few dollars or a few cents, making it ridiculous by the small amount, but they should give him
such a sum as would show that in Philadelphia every husband has the right and must rule his own household."

The jury after a short deliberation returned a verdict of $500 for the plaintiff.

Archbishop Dennison's Famous Toast.
"Here's health to all that we love,
Here's health to all that love us,
Here's health to all those that love
them,
That love those that love them
That love us!"

Do you notice what a large circle wish
this for health includes? and will you notice the reference is not to the wine-cup, but to a standard medicine, the "Golden Medical Discovery," that can bring health to the large number of friends we each love. True it is not a "beverage," and does not inebriate,
but is a health-giving medicine, a blood-purifier, liver invigorator and general tonic—a remedy for Billiousness Indigestion, and Stomach troubles.
It cures Consumption, in its early stages, Scrofula, Bronchitis, and throat diseases.

Sons of Distinguished Sires.

In a down town cafe the other day I met two gentlemen whose names will recall remarkable men and remarkable events in American history. They were Lieutenant Fremont and Lieutenant
Lawrence of the United States navy.
The former is the son of the late distinguished John C. Fremont, "the Pathfinder," who ran for president of the United States, and the other was Lawrence, the grandson of the hero of Lake Erie, old "don't give up the ship." That these two gentlemen should come into the New York lunch room for something to eat and drink was nothing remarkable, but that they should come in arm and arm, two naval chums, was something sufficient to stir the imagination.
Lieutenant Fremont is attached to the new cruiser Philadelphia. He is a fine specimen of manhood, as was his father
before him.—New York Herald.

"Listed," as the brokers say, at "100

rilla is always a fair equivalent for the Fall Neckwear for Men.

The shade of neckwear of September was mulberry, and beautiful indeed were the combinations in which its treatment was varied. There are many men that will not wear a red neck scarf under any consideration. They entertain a positive prejudice to the blue, and nothing can change them. To them the mulberry offerings are a benison.

Red, red, red! Red here, red there, red everywhere. Red is the rage in fine neckwear.

The ruddiest, reddest reds are worn by some of the dressy men, that, by a subjugation of every other detail of attire, seek to quell the blazonry of this single gleam of texture.—Clothier and Furnisher.

The State of Europe.
The present state of Europe suggests to the thoughtful man scores of questions which the ordinary student of foreign politics finds it hard to answer. Why has Italy allied herself with her old enemy, Austria? Why does Russia threaten the peace of Europe? Why are France and Germany hereditary enemies? What is the exact status of Turkey in European affairs? Why is war said to be imminent, and where and how is it most likely to break out?—Forum.

How to Select a Turkey.
In this country only is the turkey found in a wild state. It is very fitting, therefore, that in the Christmas dinner it should be the principal dish. The turkey must be wisely chosen, well cooked and properly served. It should be short and plump, the meat white,
with some fat, the legs black and smooth;
and if there be spurs they should be short. The end of the breastbone should be flexible, more like gristle than bone.
A turkey that is long in proportion to its size, and has dark or bluish flesh,
may be tender, but certainly will not be finely flavored and juicy. A dry picked turkey will be found to have a much better flavor than a scalded one. All poultry that is dry picked costs a few cents a pound more than the scalded,
but is well worth the extra price.—Maria Parloa in Ladies' Home Journal.

It is said that many Englishmen are visiting this country this season. I asked Jinks what they came for. He said he supposed to marry soft-pated, millionaire women, to talk the fellows out of their money, who want to be fooled, and to lay in a supply of Dr.
Bull's Cough Syrup.

Cultivating Nuts.
Effort is now being made to introduce in the United States a very remarkable nut from Japan called the "ginko." The tree that bears it is supposed to be the oldest in the world, inasmuch as it grew
as far back as the coal forming epoch.
Beautiful specimens of it extend in two rows on either side of the main avenue
leading to the department of agriculture.
Some of them are bearing fruit this year.
In Florida experiments are being tried for the improvement of the small species of chestnut called the "chingapin." It is also being attempted to graft upon the chingapin big chestnuts, in order that the latter may be produced on a dwarf growth.—Washington Star.

Damages Asked for Taking Cold.
John H. Taylor, of Nashville, Ind., while traveling on the Wabash railway from St. Louis to Stanberry in October, 1889, contracted a cold through the negligence of the railroad company in not having the car properly heated. The cold culminated in an attack of rheumatism, which has crippled him for life. For this he brought suit against the company for $10,000 damages. Judge Goodman, in the circuit court, sustained a demurrer to the evidence of the plaintiff.
An appeal will be taken to the supreme court.—Cor. St. Louis Republic.

Buying Coal.

Householders who may never have acquired the habit of laying in a winter's supply of coal in summer or fall, and whose regrets for failing to do so are heard with the regularity of the annual advent of cold weather, may stop repin-ing. It is true economy to buy little coal at a time. Coal men will tell you that this fuel rapidly loses in quality.
The gases pass off by exposure or something of that kind, and with them the heating power diminishes. There is one thing, however, that is a necessity in making the most of this kind of thrift.
The coal bought in small quantities
should be taken from fresh shipments.
There is no profit in buying coal that may have lain for weeks in a yard. It should come fresh from the cars in order to get the best service out of it.—New York Times.

WATERPROOF GARMENTS.

Wraps for Rainy Weather Which Are Becoming to Fair Pedestrians.
No lady's wardrobe is complete without a waterproof wrap of some sort. There is a vast difference in these particular garments, but the best are always the cheapest
in the end, and perfectly satisfactory.
Shower proof cloaks may be more becoming and prettier of aspect, but when it comes to hard wear and tear there is nothing like the veritable mackintosh, especially as the manufacturers can ensure that there is no small whatever. The water-proofs of a season or so ago were made with distinct skirts and capes. Now there are waterproofs with the skirts attached to front pieces, which are slipped over the shoulder, thus minimizing the weight. The capes are single breasted, for if they do open they show only a sort of vest of the same waterproof. Double breasted capes are also made, showing no buttons and lined with silk. The waterproofed material is often a pretty checked woolen, so that with the silk lining the cloaks can be made to answer the double purpose of a wrap.

GARMENTS FOR WET WEATHER.
Some of the new capes are shaped on the shoulders, and high collars are almost universal. Many of the cloaks are drawn in to the figure at the back, and some have a couple of plaits, which take away from the apparent width at the waist. The great recommendation of the waterproofed garments of the present day is that they are becoming as well as useful. In the cut are shown two new styles. One is of dust colored tweed lined with crimson and fashioned with a deep cape and hood. Most of the hoods, by the way, are movable. The second figure represents a stylish mackintosh. It is made of tartan, the plaids of which are skillfully cut and planned.

Waterproof money and jewel belts for traveling are made for both ladies and gentlemen, with a series of small pockets capable of holding a great deal. Hats are made impervious to wet, and are a great boon. Gloves also.

Mantles and Jackets.
Mantles are always difficult to choose,
but there is a great variety to tempt purchasers. The best are three-quarter length with high shoulders and collar. Some of the newest have yokes of velvet or fur introduced.

Broche velvets will be a good deal worn
as the season advances, and all the cloaks are cut on the cross. This cross cutting adds to the amplitude of the folds.

Sicilienne is frequently blended with velvet and sable tail. Handsome shot silk linings are used, and for evening wear very light cloths are trimmed principally with white Thibet, goat, and richly embroidered in small pearl beads and gold thread. For traveling there is a good deal of solid comfort in the ample woolen check cloaks, which have detachable capes, cut on the cross, descending almost to the knee.

The jackets are most of them of the high-waist order, with big flap pockets and deep gauntlet cuffs. These have a waistcoat and upstanding collar. There are jackets in black cloth, embroidered in black and gold, and jackets in fancy cloth elaborately braided. Cloth covert coats with their loose fronts and high turndown collar afford a pleasing variety.

Riding Habits.
As American women are not only following the English style in their manner of riding but also in the fashion of their habits, the accompanying cut will be of interest to lady equestrians. It shows a riding habit in blue cloth flecked with white and made with a double breasted coat cut with hip seams. The coat displays a scarlet cloth waistcoat. The skirt is cut so as to fit the saddle when the rider is seated.
The derby hat worn with this habit is of the same color as the habit. An idea is also given of the style of saddle, livery of the groom, etc.

AN ENGLISH RIDING OUTFIT.
A French habit seen had the skirt in black Melton cloth. The waistcoat was in red cloth, crossed with black frogs, while the jacket worn over it was in fawn colored cloth. Mousquetaire gloves, high boots in patent leather and a black silk hat were furnished to wear with this habit.

Silks and Brocades.
For evening dresses come colored stripes on white moire or faille grounds. Very narrow stripes of several colors are together, as pink, mauve, pistache and yellow in one pattern, while others have stripes of a single color in satin only a quarter of an inch wide on white faille.
Still others have wider white moire stripes
"peppered" with tiny black dots, alternating with such wide black stripes of rose, green or mauve. Jeweled effects are the novelty in rich brocades. New bias striped silks have gay flowered vines on black grounds. Changeable stripes of black with gold are effective beside black satin stripes.
Heavy corded bengalines come in new dark shades for day dresses, and in light tints
for evening wear, says Harper's Bazar.

Beware

A Call for Pearline
brings the best washing compound in the world, and the original one—all others are imitations. It costs no more than common soap. It does more than soap's work, and half of your own be-

be washed with it—without scouring, rubbing and scrubbing, and with absolute safety. Make its acquaintance; millions of women call it their best friend.

Every grocer keeps it, because he has constant calls for it.

Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.

A Six-year-old Giant.

There is a remarkable specimen of a boy in the New Jersey Reform school at Jamesburg. He has been made a ward of the state because it is not considered safe for him to be at large. He is only six years old, but has the manners and the maturity of a young man of twenty and the mustache of a man much older.
He is called by the medical men who have examined him a precocious baby and a wonder in more ways than one.
His name is Herman Hoffer. He is more than four feet in height, has a nicely curled blond mustache and can strike from the shoulder with the force of a sledgehammer. He can move a barrel of flour and lift easily a 200 pound weight. His parents have found it impossible to control him.

The boy is not only the admiration of his companions, but the terror of the neighborhood. He can whip any boy in Trenton, and he occasionally amused himself by playing David to the town Philistines. The parents were forced to appeal to Judge Robert S. Woodruff, of the Mercer circuit court, to put him in subjection. He was examined by Dr.
Horace G. Wetherill, who pronounced him a phenomenon and a remarkable case. The boy is now at Jamesburg and the wonder of the institution. He has not yet made any trouble. He is too deeply interested in his new surroundings. He is attending the school, but the teachers have not yet reached a conclusion as to the trend of his mind.—

FARM GARDEN

CLEARING LAND.

Labor Saving Devices for Removing Stones

and Grubbing Out Small Timber.

The clearing of land is heavy work which is frequently left from year to year because of its hard character. To obviate the difficulty such work occasions,

a New York farmer, writing to the New England Homestead, says:

"I have invented an attachment to my stone boat by which the team is compelled to do the loading of heavy stumps, rocks, etc., and which facilitates the moving of large quantities of rubbish,

the leveling of knolls and filling of cradle holes. As will be seen in the cut, the right hand rail is removed from the common stone boat and the boat plank is attached to the boat by a heavy hinge.

This extra plank is drawn by a chain attached to the team the same as the main boat. We will suppose a heavy rock has been pried out of the earth. The chain of the wing is loosened and attached farther back on the main chain,

while the block at A is inserted to separate the wing from the boat. The boat is then driven beside the rock, and as the team proceeds it will frequently take its place on the boat without effort on the part of the driver, the wing tending to force it in place. If because of its shape

this is not readily done, a very little pry-

ing while the team is in motion will set it where it is desired. Meadow land which is to be leveled must first be plowed, when the attachment will quickly take up a load if the boat be weighted.

If there is very much of this scraper work to do, the edge of the wing should be shod with a strip of steel, like an old cart tire or piece of saw blade. The outside rail of the wing also should be higher than for stone. The hinge should not be too loose. It should keep the wing on the ground by the weight of the boat."

In the second cut is shown a plan for grubbing small timber, originally explained by a Pennsylvania farmer in

The Country Gentleman. He says: "I use two pulley blocks in extricating stumps. I frequently use three. The accompanying sketch will show the manner of using pulleys. A third block

could be used to pass the terminal line

under to get lower draft for the team.

In the illustration our object is to take the tree out 'root and branch.' By means of a chain we attach the block B, containing two pulleys, to the tree as high as practicable. The block A, containing one pulley, is anchored to a stump or tree close to the ground. Anchorage should be rather farther from the tree

than is shown in the sketch. One end of the rope is made fast to the iron loop

of the single pulley block. The other end of the rope is first passed over one of the double pulleys, then over the single pulley, then over the other double pulley and lastly the end of the rope C is made fast to the doubletree to which the team is attached. The team is started while a man back of the tree stands with an ax and strikes across little ridges of earth which are thrown up by roots, each time severing a root, till

over goes the tree.

At Last.

The long expected illustrated History of Utah by the eminent historian, Hubert H. Bancroft, has at last appeared. It is absolutely a revelation. After visiting the field in person, taking testimony impartially from all sides, critically reviewing the enormous number of 1000 different authorities, and searching many of the secret archives of the Mormon Church, Mr. Bancroft now gives to the World this wonderful and remarkable work the only true history of Mormonism published.

The work reads like a romance—the wonderful adventures of trappers and travelers, the bloody Indian wars, the thrilling accounts of massacres, and miraculous escapes, the famous Danite Association or Destroying Angels, the story of Brigham Young—all this fresh from the pen of the brilliant and gifted author forms a narrative of exciting interest, as fascinating as a novel yet true to the letter. Above all in surpassing interest is the unfolding of the great Mormon question and the mysteries of Polygamy, which will be read with eager interest by all classes of people throughout the English speaking world. The work is published in one large handsome volume of 800 pages, bound in red and gold, and grandly illustrated with steel-plate portraits of the great Mormon leaders, exquisite half-tone engravings and dazzling colored plates. It is issued by the great Publishing House of the Pacific Coast—The History Company of San Francisco, and can only be procured through their authorized agents. We call attention to the advertisement in another column, under heading of $25.00 Reward.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

The "Allegory of the War in Song" which was presented with so much success in Madison Square Garden, New York, on May 2d and Oct. 2d and 3d, is to be given in Boston for the first time on the 19th inst. The "Allegory," which is partly the composition and exclusively the arrangement of Mr. Silas G. Pratt of New York, is a most effective production and calls to mind most vividly the struggle which, within the memory of the most of us, resulted in the freeing of a race. Mr. Pratt has taken a number of songs which were most popular before the war, and also a number of the most stirring melodies to which the war gave birth, and by an ingenious arrangement and the introduction of marching troops, waving flags, and at times the liberal use of the stereopticon, has succeeded in presenting a picture which appeals with equal force to the "battle scarred veteran" and to the civilian, whose only knowledge of a gun is that it is most likely to go off when it is not loaded. The songs of the "Allegory" will be sung by a chorus of 600 voices, accompanied by an orchestra of 50 pieces, and a military band. This chorus has been carefully selected from the Chorus, and Choral societies of Boston, and contains very many singers of wide reputation. The orchestra will contain the very best musicians that Boston can furnish, and the band will be equally strong. Col. Thomas R. Mathews will command the military, which fact guarantees the excellence of the display. Gov. Wm. E. Russell and his staff will be present as guests and will review the troops. Many of the veterans of the G. A. R. will take part in the "Return of the Veterans" which occurs in the latter part of the performance. Among the prominent Bostonians interested, in addition to those above mentioned are, Ex. Gov. John D. Long, Ex. Gov. Oliver Ames, Ex. Gov. J. Q. A. Brackett, Ex. Gov. Wm. Gaston, Mayor Nathan P. Matthews, Jr., Ex. Mayor O'Brien, Hon. Thos. N. Hart, Hon. A. W. Beard, Col. Arnold A. Rand, who is the Recorder of the Loyal Legion, Major W. P. Shreve, Hon. W. E. Barrett, and many others. The "Anniversary Overture" composed by Silas G. Pratt, in honor of Geo. Grant, and presented in London on the occasion of Gen. Grant's visit there in 1877, will open the "Allegory." Another most interesting musical number is the "Battle Fantasia," which was presented for the first time on Oct. 2d, and was received with enthusiastic cheers by the audience of 9,000 people. The entire proceeds are for the benefit of the "Grant Monument Fund" of New York, and the "Woman's Relief Corps" of Boston, and with this before them it is expected that the various posts of the G. A. R. will interest themselves largely in the sale of tickets. Mr. H. B. Phinny, manager of the Allegory, will be most happy to furnish information regarding the production and the tickets may be obtained by application at the office of "The New England Grocer," or Ditson & Co., 453 Washington St., at Thayer's ticket office in the Parker House, and at the Woman's Relief Corps, 657 Washington St. Prices are very moderate, ranging from 50 cents for admission to $1 for the best reserved seats. A very handsome Souvenir Programme has been issued, through the assistance of Rep. Daniel P. Toomey, and other prominent gentlemen.

TREMONT THEATRE.

PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA.—The Boston Philharmonic Orchestra, an organization of some sixty musicians, Mr. Bernhard Listemann, conductor, Mr. Alfred DeSeve, leader, gave on Thursday afternoon of last week the first of a series of eight concerts to be given at the Tremont Theatre during the present season. Until now, there has been but one regular course of orchestral concerts, and of late years increased patronage has forced the price of their tickets quite out of reach of the average pocketbook. These concerts by Philharmonic Orchestra will meet a want in the musical life that has for several years been steadily growing. They are educational to a high degree, in that Mr. Listemann, more than any of his worthy contemporaries, continually seeks to give a hearing to new compositions of merit, regardless of the nationality of the composer. At this first concert were given three works new to Boston, prominent among which was a beautiful suite for orchestra by Mr. E. A. McDowell, one of Boston's most promising resident composers. At the second concert, Thursday afternoon Nov. 19, Mr. Listemann will himself appear as a soloist, when he will play Tschalkowsky's concerto, and he will also have the assistance of that most talented of all readers, Mr. George Riddle, who will do the text of a recent work by Grieg, "Bargil," which will receive its first hearing in America. These concerts are all on Thursday afternoons, the remaining dates being Nov. 19, Dec. 10, 31, Jan. 14, 28, Feb. 18 and March 3. There is ample time for patrons to get the trains, as all concerts begin at half past two, and are out at four o'clock. The prices are 50 cents, 75 cents, $1 and $1.50. There is not a more beautiful theatre in Boston than the Tremont, and the acoustics are without flaw.

What is

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhoea and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

Dr. G. C. Oregon,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

Dr. J. F. Kitching, Cordway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. Archer, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

plays are always good, the management of this "historic old playhouse" ever enterprising, and the public of Boston and vicinity, we may say of Massachusetts and New England, steadfastly appreciative. The new play in question is the famous "Lady Bountiful," produced last season at the Gaiety, London, and now presented for the first time in this country on the same date by the Boston Museum and the Lyceum Theatre, New York. The scenic effects will be unique and striking, and the cast, a very strong one, will include the first appearance this season of Mr. Eben Plympton, Miss Clarke, Miss O'Leary, Miss Campbell, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Barron and Mr. Boniface have very important roles.

Mascagni's "Rustic Chivalry" has not made much success at either Leipzig or Cologne, in which towns it has just been presented.

The New York Oratorio Society this season, will give Brahms' "Requiem," Schumann's "Faust," Part III, "The Messiah," Bach's Passion Music, and Saint Saens' Samson and Delilah.

The Cecilia Society of Boston will repeat each of its concerts this season for the benefit of the working people of the city whose weekly wages do not exceed fifteen dollars. The price of tickets will not exceed 25 cents.

Verdi's "Falstaff" is reported to contain certain parts for five prima donnas three sopranos, a mezzo soprano a contralto and three tenors, besides Maurel in the title role. Verdi, who is now seventy-seven years old, is working leisurely on his new opera, and is not expected to have it finished before 1892. A small chorus will be one of the features of "Falstaff," and it will be used once throughout the work.—Musical Record.

Patti has decided to take just one more farewell previous to her final farewell in 1893.

Mr. Henry Massfield of Boston, brother of Mr. Richard Massfield and a son of the late Mme. Rudersdorf, is studying for the operatic stage at Milan.

A new opera entitled "The Grav Nun," is by Mr. N. Dushane Cloward librettist and Mr. Carl Busch composer.

The Seidl Orchestra will give four concerts at Boston Music Hall this season, on Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 13 and March 10.

Rubinstein, who sometime since declared his intention of never giving any more concerts, recently gave a pianoforte recital at Tiflis.

The birth centenary of Scribe the famous playwright and librettist is to be observed in Paris December 24.

In addition to the regular Philharmonic and Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, the following are to take place:—Philharmonic Orchestra, Columbia Theatre Nov. 1.

Carl Stasny, Bumstead Hall, Nov. 3.

Arthur Whiting, Steinert Hall, Nov. 5.

E. A. McDowell, Chickering Hall, Nov. 6.

Austrian Juvenile Band, Music Hall, Nov. 8 and 11.

Gertrude Franklin, Steinert Hall, 9, 17.

French Opera Comique, Union Hall, Nov. 10.

Julia Wyman, Steinert Hall, Nov. 10, 12.

Alfred Gruenfield, Music Hall, Nov. 12 and 24.

S. G. Pratt, Allegory, Mechanic's Hall, Nov. 19 and 20.

Schirmer-Mapleson Concert, Music Hall, Nov. 21.

BOSTON THEATRE.

Seats are now being secured for the Thanksgiving week performance of the "Old Homestead." Notwithstanding the long run this play has enjoyed, Boston Theatre is filled at every session, as if it had just commenced its run.

COLUMBIA THEATRE.

Next Tuesday afternoon at 3.30 Mr. Sidney Woodlets will give a recital at the Columbia Theatre—Macaulay's Lays of Ancient Rome. To-morrow evening a lecture entitled Footsteps of Columbus in the Old and New World will be given by Thomas H. Cummings.

Richard Massfield completes his engagement at the Globe Theatre next Saturday night, "Don Juan" will be the play the first four nights of the week and Saturday matinee.

Hallen and Hart will appear in the new comedy "Later On" at the Hollis Street Theatre next week.

At the Grand Opera House Harry Laey's latest success "Jack Royal of the 92d" will occupy the Boards next week. The play is a five act military drama. The scene is laid in New York, 1863.

Mascagni.

Pietro Mascagni a native of Leghorn was born in 1863. He studied with Ponchielli. He composed one work before he wrote "Cavalleria Rusticana," which was first given at Rome in May 1890. He has since composed three operas, "L'Ami Fritz," "Les Rantzani" and "Radcliffe."

A Sunday Raid.

On Sunday a man belonging in town hired, a carryall at John Linehan's stables on Foster street, and proceeded to Dublin, where he took in a crowd of roughs, and together they started for Lynnfield Hotel where they demanded admittance and drink, both of which were refused by landlord Burce. A parley ensued, during which a telephone message came to the hotel, from Mr. Linehan, who had returned and learned who had hired his team, too late to prevent its going out, asking if the hitchup had been seen. Mr. Bruce replied it was there, and the owner of the vehicle started in hot haste to recover his property, which he feared might be wrecked before it came back to his possession.

Arriving at the hotel accompanied by an assistant, Mr. Linehan attempted to retake his turnout, but was resisted with violent menaces, and strategy had to be resorted to, for which John is never slow. He walked up to the carriage and observed that a spring had been broken by the toughs in charge, and proceeded to fix it up losing as much time as possible to allow the Peabody police to arrive, and while tinkering the spring his assistant loosed the traces and put the horse in the barn.

As time wore on the thirsty crowd became impatient and demanded the horse, again threatening violence, but their attempt to enter the barn was bluffed by the hostler, who threatened dire vengeance upon the man who invaded his establishment. Still the time went on and at last the enraged mob made another attempt to enter the barn, and so fearful was their attitude the hostler concluded, discretion was the better part of valor and allowed the hoodlums to enter without striking a blow.

Fortunately, the police arrived at this juncture, and Mr. Linehan was enabled to take off his property while the toughs skulked at a safe distance and jeered the police but they had to walk home.

Holten Lodge Out Visiting.

A fraternal visit was made by Holten Lodge, I. O. O. F. to Fraternity lodge of Salem, on Wednesday evening, the occasion being the forty-fifth anniversary of the institution of the latter lodge. Fountain lodge of Topsfield was also present to share in the festivities of the occasion and a thoroughly enjoyable evening was passed. A collation was served presided over by N. G., J. H. Sibley, followed by a musical and literary entertainment.

During the evening speeches were made by the District Deputy, Noble Grand of Fountain lodge, vice grands of Holten and Essex lodges Past Grand William F. Sawyer and Rev. A. F. Welch of this town and many others.

The fraternal features of the organization were exemplified by the presentation of a purse of $54.22 which was hastily made up for Mark Klippel of Fraternity lodge, to help him bear the loss sustained that morning through the ravages of the fire fiend. About $200 had previously been raised for him.

About midnight the local lodge returned as they went, in five chartered cars upon the Essex Electric road. About 130 members of Holten lodge participated in the festivities.

Royal Arcanum.

Salem Council, Royal Arcanum, observed its 14th anniversary in Grand Army Hall, Salem, on Monday evening by a banquet and a musical and literary entertainment. Past Regent Thompson, Supreme Representative Goodwin and other distinguished officials addressed the gathering. The order numbers 122,650 members and has distributed $16,285,000, to dependents and other beneficiaries during the period of its existence. Its present liabilities to policy holders is $366,000,000.

This town was represented at the festive board.

They Broke The Law.

The secretary of the treasury has issued a circular letter in which he says that in view of the fact that there has appeared in the newspapers in the different parts of the country, cuts of the new designs for coins recently approved by the government, he deemed it advisable to state that there is now a law on the statute books which was approved Feb. 10, 1891, and which is known as the "public act No. 71," that forbids the making or publishing of anything in resemblance to any of the coins of the United States or of foreign governments or even the inscription thereon.—Newburyport News.

Annual Festival.

The Library and Lyceum society connected with St. John's Church, whose motto is "Knowledge and Charity," held a select party in the Town hall on Wednesday evening which was attended by seventy-five couples, although but fifty-three couples participated in the unique and very pretty march led by John F. O'Connell and Miss Josie Slattery of Salem, followed by the president of the society James J. Carlin and Miss Nellie Horrigu.

After dancing two plain quadrilles the military march was formed and the entire company marched to the basement where an elegant repast was served by McCallis & Co., of Salem and full justice was done by all to the tempting spread. Dancing was immediately resumed and the rapidly passing hours were made full of mirth and jollity.

The following had charge of the affair and much is due to them for the successful management of the same. Floor director Dennis P. Gill, Asst. Floor director James J. Carlin, Aids. Timothy J. Cahill, John E. Hayes, Timothy J. Woods, John F. O'Connell, John H. Callahan, R. B. McCarthy, Daniel F. Bressanham, Daniel J. Donovan, John J. Connors and Thomas J. Hannan.

Music was furnished by the Eight Regiment Orchestra, and it was on o'clock before the assembly had the remotest notions of sauntering towards home.

Fraternal Life Insurance.

By actual results no less than by comparison with other organizations of similar nature, the Ancient Order of United Workmen stands at the head of the list as a fraternal insurance association. It is older by several years than any other. It has long since passed the period recognized by life insurance companies as the experimental stage, and instead of costing more to carry a policy now than formally, as predicted by all the leading life companies, the rate has been reduced, while death claims are more promptly paid than by the best life companies on the continent. Out of 18 deaths which occurred last month the total in New England, 17 were paid in an average interval of 40 hours from the time of making claim and within less than a week of the hour of death. The remaining case would not have affected the average had it not been necessary to wait the appointment of a guardian to receive the money for minor children.

The order numbers 265,000 members, 25,000 of whom are in New England. It has cost for the past ten years eleven dollars a year to carry $2,000 insurance.

A lodge of the order is in operation in town and includes among the members the most intelligent thrifty business men and mechanics in the community.

A Difference of Opinion.

People who know, say that Messrs Furber and Lawrence are sure to remain in the Boston & Maine directory next year, but beyond that nothing is yet positively settled. Rumors say that there is some difference of opinion among the insiders as to who shall give way for the proposed new man.

After Mr. Jackman's Scalp.

Rival petitions are in circulation in Peabody for the appointment of Colonel C. T. Batchelder as postmaster of that town and for the reappointment of T. H. Jackman, whose term of office expires March 17, 1892.—Newburyport News.

Bad For Lasters.

C. B. Tibbets, the Lynn shoe manufacturer, contemplates using new lasting machines hereafter in his factory on Willow street. It was here that the Knights of Labor voluntarily accepted a reduction in prices to get the firm to remove its country work to Lynn. The lasters were not in this move, and Mr. Tibbets will put in these machines so that he will be able to compete with other manufacturers in making shoes. Mr. Tibbets has already brought back all his country work and intends to do a big business hereafter in Lynn.

Five Dollar Counterfeit.

A new counterfeit $5 bill is on the market. It is a treasury note of the date of 1880, W. S. Rosecrans, register, J. J. Hutton, treasurer. The portrait, vignette and other work on the counterfeit is much different from the genuine. In the title "United States" the "i" is not dotted, although the heavy shading is there.

CHAPTER X.

"Do you feel able to join us at our midday meal? We call it almuerzo, or breakfast, but you, I suppose, call it, like the English, luncheon," said Dona Zarifa to Derwent as they entered the house on their return.

"If there is time for me to rest a little first I shall be very happy to do so," he answered. "I am ashamed to confess my weakness, but I feel tired now."

"You will have an hour to rest," she replied, "and then, if you are not equal to the exertion, pray do not think of attempting to make it."

"Oh, I shall be all right in an hour," he answered confidently.

He did feel very much better when, an hour later, he made his appearance in the dining room, where Don Maurizio greeted him cordially, and a tall, dark man rose and offered his hand, with a smile of recognition. For an instant Derwent was puzzled. Then, like a flash, the scene at the mine occurred to him, and even before Don Maurizio said "Senor Barrera" he knew who it was.

"Senor Barrera wishes to express to you his sincere sympathy and regret for your wound. He has come, by my request, to talk the matter over, and after awhile we will do so. But now you must sit down and take a glass of wine at once, for you are looking fatigued. I am afraid that my daughter and Padre Francisco led you to overtask your strength this morning."

"On the contrary," said Derwent, "I find that I am stronger than I thought; and I was too much interested while out to think of fatigue. I have been delighted by what I have seen of the hacienda."

"The arrangements are only what you will find on any great Mexican estate," Don Maurizio answered; "and if there is any advantage in favor of Miraflores it is owing to the fact that we give everything a personal supervision. My daughter visits the school and the hospital daily when she is at home."

"And Padre Francisco visits them when I am absent, so they are never without supervision," said that young lady, with a smile toward the priest.

"You liked our gardens, did you not?" Senora Peralta—who, Derwent learned later, was called Dona Luisa by every one in the house—asked, turning to him.

While he answered, expressing his admiration in the conventional adjectives of the French language, he divided his attention between the succession of well made dishes placed before him, and the simple but elegant furniture of the room—especially two graceful sideboards, modern in design, but made of carved and inlaid Mexican woods, and a collection of beautiful china plates hung around the walls.

"You recognize the Sevres?" said Dona Zarifa, following his glance. "I brought a good deal of it from Paris, and some of the plates seemed to me too pretty to be used for other than decorative purposes."

"You have spent some time in Paris?" he asked.

"I was there for three years, in the Sacre Coeur," she replied. "And last winter I went into society with my aunt—papa's sister—who lives there."

"It is needless to ask if you liked Paris?" he said.

"It is needless," she answered. "I don't know how that may be; but in fact I did not like it very much. I am afraid I was pining for Mexico."

"She absolutely likes Miraflores better than Paris," said her father, with a smile as proud as it was fond.

"How could I fail to like it better?" she said simply. "All my occupations and my duties are at Miraflores, while in Paris I had nothing to do but amuse myself. And when one has nothing to do but amuse one's self, one very soon wearies of it."

"I am afraid that most young ladies would not agree with you," said Derwent, while he thought how eagerly the gay world must have opened its arms to one so beautiful and so rich. "For, of course, she was well introduced," he added to himself. "Don Maurizio is too thoroughly a man of the world to permit his daughter to appear anywhere except with the very best chaperonage." And he was justified in this opinion by the fact that the aunt of whom Zarifa had spoken was a French countess, well known in the Faubourg Saint Germain.

The pleasant, informal meal over, Don Maurizio said: "Now, Mr. Derwent, if you will accompany me, I shall be very glad to interpret between Senor Barrera and yourself, and something like an understanding may be arrived at."

Acceding willingly, Derwent followed his host to a room on one side of the great passage of entrance, which Don Maurizio called his "private den." It was fitted up very much like an office, with large, official looking desk, a well equipped writing table, and solid but comfortable chairs, and had altogether an aspect of practical business—that aspect which a room always seems to borrow from the character of its occupant.

Lighting their cigars and seating themselves the two men who had last met at the mouth of the Buena Esperanza looked at each other; and Derwent was impressed afresh by the strong face and the eagle-like eye of Barrera. "A man to strike quickly and strike hard, when his enemy was facing him, but not a man to shoot another from an ambush, or to cause him to be so shot," was his final decision.

"Senor Barrera wishes me to assure you," said Don Maurizio, after the former had uttered a few sentences in Spanish, "that he felt not the faintest enmity toward you when he was at the mine, and that if Fernandez asserts that he uttered any threats against you he simply lies."

"Tell him, pray," said Derwent, "that I have not the faintest doubt but that Senor Fernandez lies. I have never believed anything that he has said to me about this matter, and I am not surprised to find that he has lied throughout. Assure Senor Barrera that his manner to me at the mine was sufficient proof that he felt no enmity toward me."

Senor Barrera bowed with grave dignity when this was translated to him. "Tell the senor, mi amigo," he said, "that if he had bought the mine I should never have troubled him, for I should have known that he had done so in ignorance and good faith. But I distinctly warned Fernandez that if the mine was sold I should shoot him, and, believe me, I should not have lurked behind a rock to do so."

"I am very sure of that," said Derwent in reply. "Ask him if he agrees with you in suspecting that Fernandez is accountable for my shooting."

But on this point Senor Barrera would not commit himself. He would only say that he believed Fernandez to be capable du tout, and that the motive attributed to punish Derwent and at the same time throw suspicion on himself—was sufficient to account for the deed. But the ranchero at whose house they had spent the night had bad connections. It was possible that one of these had waylaid the party in hope of plunder, and, finding a man lingering behind the rest, had shot and robbed him. "When I am suffering from a false accusation myself is not the time to accuse another, without the most positive proof," said the Mexican quietly.

"He is a fine fellow," said Derwent, apropos of this remark, "and if they do not stop worrying him—for there had been official examinations and threats of arrest and imprisonment—I will go and shoot Fernandez myself. I am very sure that somebody ought to do it on general principles."

"Barrera is under bond to appear as soon as you are able to testify concerning the affair," said Don Maurizio. "They cannot possibly prove anything against him, for his alibi is unimpeachable. But on Fernandez's testimony of the threats they will pretend to believe that he had the shooting done, and the result will be a heavy fine at least. He is a powerful enemy—a man of great influence—and they will never rest until they have ruined him."

"What can we do to prevent it—anything?" asked Derwent. "I am ready to leave the country, if that will serve any good purpose. I am the only witness to the shooting. They cannot prove it without me."

"Fernandez is capable of declaring that you have been murdered and put out of the way," said Don Maurizio, smiling. "No, no; you must stay and face the matter. When is the deferred examination of the case to take place, senor?" he asked in Spanish.

"In about two weeks," answered Barrera. "It was deferred so long because it was represented that the senor here could not appear sooner."

"Well," said Don Maurizio, "in the interval we must do our best to find the real criminal. That is the only hope."

"It seems a slender one," said Derwent.

He knew that it did not in any degree rest with him, however; so he sat by, smoking and watching the changing shadows over the wide plain with its luminous horizon, while the others talked in Spanish of probabilities and chances which they alone understood. Presently Padre Francisco, passing under the arcade, paused at the open window for a few words with the group. Don Maurizio and Senor Barrera each asked his advice on the subject they were discussing; he spoke with them for some minutes, and then, turning, said to Derwent:

"Since you cannot do any more here, senor, and since it is not very amusing to listen to a conversation in a foreign language, suppose you come with me. It may interest you to look over my library. I have a good many English books."

"With much pleasure," said Derwent, rising with a sense of relief.

Joining the padre, they walked along the arcade and presently turned into an entrance which led to a small and very charming court surrounded by cloister-like arches and full of cloister-like quiet. Not a sound broke the perfect stillness here. A few doves were walking about the pavement in the center of the quadrangle, while the deep blue sky looked down as if on something shut away from the world and open only to God.

"It is like a bit of a monastery or convent," said Derwent, glancing around.

The priest smiled. "There is the church," he said, indicating a large, pointed doorway opposite; "and here are my apartments close at hand, communicating with the sacristy. Enter, senor."

Derwent found himself in a sitting room which had a mingled religious and scholarly atmosphere. The deep windows looked out on the distant hills; the floor was laid in tiles like all the rest of the house; the walls were almost entirely faced with shelves filled with books, and a large writing table was also partially covered with volumes, as well as with many sheets of manuscript, while immediately opposite the large chair that stood by it was a tall crucifix, the exquisitely carved ivory figure of which was thrown into relief by the polished ebony of the cross. In the few vacant spaces on the walls two or three devotional pictures hung—notably a beautiful Madonna and a head of St. Francis of Assisi. Beyond, through a curtained doorway, was a glimpse of a chamber simple in its arrangements as a monk's cell.

"What an ideal spot for a scholar or a saint, padre mio!" said the young man, with a smiling glance around.

"Too ideal, I have often thought," answered the priest gravely. "Saints are not made in flowery places, and Miraflores deserves its name in all respects. I could not reconcile it to my conscience to stay here if I were not under obedience. But my superiors think it a good place for me. There is certainly a great deal to do not only on the hacienda, but elsewhere; for since the banishment of the religious orders the parish priests are not able to attend to all the needs of the people. And then I have leisure in which to write."

"You write for publication?" asked Derwent, looking at the workmanlike aspect of the table.

"Yes; that is part of my work—after the care of souls, which is, indeed, included in it."

"You write, I presume, on religious topics."

"Can you tell me any great topic into which religion does not enter?" asked the other, with a smile. "I write on the social, the political, the philosophical questions of our times, into all of which religion enters deeply and vitally. But I did not bring you here to talk of myself or my work. Come, these are my English books."

He walked up to a division of the encircling shelves, and Derwent was surprised to find himself confronted with the works of every noted English writer, even the most "advanced" and destructive in their tendencies; apostles of free thought were ranged by the side of Roman cardinals, and all the brilliant modern essays were well represented.

"Do you read these books?" he asked, unable to keep his surprise out of his voice, as he took down one of the most noted volumes of skeptical literature. "Certainly," answered the padre. "How could I feel the pulse of the times otherwise? A physician must understand the disease for which he is to prescribe. But I confess that I have no very high opinion of your English thinkers. They are iconoclastic enough, but they have neither the logic of the French nor the scholarship of the Germans."

"You understand both of those languages?"

"Oh, yes; here are my French books and here are my German. Perhaps they may interest you."

"What interests me more are these," said the young man, walking over to a range of vellum bound Latin volumes. "There must be some rare old editions here."

"Yes—if you care for such things—very rare and fine," said the priest, with his dark eyes shining. What does a scholar and a lover of books like better than to find some one who can sympathize with his passion and appreciate the value and rarity of his treasure? Volume after volume was lovingly taken down, exhibited and dilated upon—all of them valuable, many of them so rare as to be worth more than their weight in gold. While they were thus occupied time flew by unheeded; the shades of color on the distant hills had changed many times, and its mantle of golden sunshine was fading from the plain, when the sound of a bell suddenly ringing out on the silence of the court made Padre Francisco start.

"Ah," he said, putting down the volume which he held, "that is my summons. Tomorrow is a feast, and we have the vespers this evening. Do you care to go into the church, senor? It is well worth seeing, the interior of our church. Go, then, across the court and enter by the door I showed you."

Derwent willingly obeyed. Crossing the court, where the doves at his approach rose in a soft gray cloud above the arches, against the sapphire sky, he entered the door directed, and found himself in a region of mysterious gloom, where only a few starry lights here and there dissipated the obscurity.

Presently, when his eyes became more accustomed to the twilight atmosphere, he found that he had entered at the side into a church much larger and more handsome than he had expected to find. It seemed to him, indeed, that not even in Mexico had he seen anything more rich than the interior of this hacienda chapel. Beautiful tiles paved the wide nave, where many dark forms were kneeling—men praying with outstretched arms, and women shrouded in the folds of their rebozos; fine carved woodwork rose in fretted arches, and around the high altar was a blaze of gold—a splendid specimen of churrigueraesque work, as he found later.

On each side of the sanctuary lamps of exquisite design were swinging; but, as he looked, the tapers were lighted on the altar, and its beauty was revealed and enhanced by their soft radiance. Padre Francisco entered with a train of acolytes, and then, "like the sound of a great Amen," an organ chord rolled out, and the air was flooded with noble harmonies.

Nothing can be more devotional than such an evening service—especially in Mexico, where the faith and fervor of the people might move the coldest observer. Derwent found himself stirred by sentiments altogether unwonted as he leaned in his dark corner, and when at length he heard the same rich, sweet voice, that had haunted him since the evening before, float out in the beautiful strains of the benediction hymns, it seemed only a part of the perfect harmony of sight, sound and emotion which enthralled him.

CHAPTER XI.

A wounded shoulder might not, perhaps, be thought a good preparation for a period of perfect enjoyment, but to the end of his days Derwent will never have any doubt that it proved so to him. Never will he fail to look back on the fortnight at Miraflores that followed his recovery as the one enchanted time of his life—that one lingering within the magic portals of fairyland which almost all men or women know at some point on the journey of life. Generally it is not for long that any one lingers within those gates, and when once they are closed upon him who issues forth, he may wander far and wide without ever finding his way thither again. But while he is there everything else that the world holds is forgotten—sometimes even faith and duty—and if there are any drawbacks to enjoyment, any pin pricks in the spell of enchantment, he has no recollection of them afterward.

Derwent in especial would have been quite positive that there was nothing of the kind for him in those magic days—days of literal as well as metaphorical sunshine and flowers. Whenever he recalled them, he would see the deep sapphire sky looking down, he

There's danger in a cough—more than ever when your blood is "bad." It makes things easy for Consumption. But there's a cure for it in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. A positive cure—not only for Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Bronchitis, Asthma and all lingering Coughs, but for Consumption itself in all its earlier stages. It's reasonable. All these diseases depend on tainted blood. Consumption is simply Lung-scrofula. And for every form of scrofula and blood-taint, the "Discovery" is a certain remedy. It's so certain, that its makers guarantee it to benefit or cure, in every case, or the money is refunded. With a medicine that is certain, this can be done.

There's a cure for Catarrh, too, no matter what you've been led to believe. If there isn't, in your case, you'll get $500 cash. It's a bona fide offer that's made by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. They are willing to take the risk—you ought to be willing to take the medicine.

IN ACCORDANCE with an established custom, President Harrison has issued a proclamation of the National Thanksgiving, appointing the 26th of November as a day of "joyful thanksgiving to God for the bounties of his Providence, for the peace in which we are permitted to enjoy those institutions of civil and religious liberty which He gave our fathers the wisdom to devise and establish and us the courage to preserve."

THE SALEM Evening News correspondent suggests the probability that the next Fireman's ball will be held under the auspices of the Firemen's Relief Association instead of being used as a source of revenue to a few companies.

The fire department has long been a subject of local pride, and whatever conduces to the benefit or pleasure of the firemen has received the just and liberal patronage of the public, and it will matter little to the public whether it be the immediate benefit of the active firemen or prospectively, by helping to relieve cases of distress that may arise in the future, the same generous impulse will respond as willingly as in the past.

A STRONG sentiment of opposition to the movement on foot for supplanting Postmaster Jackman, has been manifested during the past week.

Late Saturday afternoon a week ago, it became known that Cyrus T. Batchelder was making quite a vigorous effort to secure for himself the appointment of postmaster, and on Monday several petitions were drawn up by disinterested private citizens, and strangely enough, Republicans, all of them, which were left in various stores about town to be signed by any who might feel disposed to do so. The petitions are addressed to Congressman William Cogswell of this District, and pray that he will use his influence to secure the reappointment of Mr. Jackman. These petitions are being numerously signed by leading citizens, including many if not all of the largest business men and manufacturers, regardless of party.

The general feeling of all classes of citizens, whether of one political party or another is, that the mail service at the local post office is as near perfection as can be expected in a town the size of ours, in fact, many more privileges and accommodations are enjoyed by those who have occasion to use the post office than are accorded to citizens of other communities of even larger population and financial importance than Peabody.

Nearly all of the advantages we now possess are attributable to the increase of business in the post office that has come about through the personal popularity of Mr. Jackman and his untiring zeal in laboring to improve the postal service. Early and late has he been at the post of duty, and whenever he saw a deficiency in the service or whenever any object of improvement was pointed out by patrons of the office, he always found the means of applying a remedy, until to-day, we may justly claim the possession of a model post office, and one conducted strictly upon business principles by an energetic chief and a corps of able assistants.

When the service under Mr. Jackman is contrasted with what was given the public under previous administrations there is no wonder the people murmur at the possibility of a change.

Mr. Jackman was appointed to the position upon the eighteenth of September, 1887, and immediately assumed the duties of the office, although not confirmed by the Senate until January, 1888. His commission is dated March 17, 1888, so it is generally considered his term will not expire until next March; but how the Department will view that question we do not ven ure to predict. That is a matter of secondary importance.

When he assumed charge of affairs, the annual income of the office was but $6130, the postmaster's salary was less than $700, and the allowance for clerk hire was $250. Mr. Jackman took the helm with John F. Moreland as assistant postmaster and George F. Low, money order clerk. The office was located in Thomas' Block, in cramped, narrow quarters, where, to wait for assorting the five o'clock mail in the afternoon was strongly suggestive of an untimely end from suffocation, and when the last piece of mail matter had been deposited in the proper repository, a rush ensued that was greatly annoying, and rendered the speedy delivery of mail an impossibility either to owners of call or lock boxes or transient applicants.

Mr. Jackman was quick to take in situation and set about without delay to remedy the evil. Application was made to several parties in town to erect a building suitable for the business, and the attention of the Department at Washington was called to the situation. Several inspectors visited Peabody with a view to investigation and if possible solve the difficulty, but scarcity both of buildings and land suitable and available, rendered all attempts to relieve the distress unavailing. There was nothing left but to wait until the receipts of the office would warrant a larger expenditure for rent.

The Postmaster then found he had another incentive to redouble his efforts to increase the business of the office, build up the income and achieve the desired results.

But the situation presented a paradox. How could business be increased to facilitate the service, without an inducement for a return of business which had for years had been diverted from the office? He saw the opening and in he went. There were opportunities to show that he was really trying to enhance the public service, and he quickly availed of those opportunities. The number of arrivals and departures of mails was small and unsatisfactory, and an increase of number and some changes of time of arrival that would allow the assorting of mail so that business men going to Boston and elsewhere could get their letters before leaving town was desired. Mr. Jackman interviewed the railroad management and obtained by the approval of the Superintendent of the mail service the necessary changes and additions.

His efforts were appreciated, and many who had "boycotted" the office in times past began to return their business to the home establishment. Mr. Jackman became popular with all who had regular or occasional business with the office, and the business steadily grew and the receipts increased, until a year ago, the first day of November, the office was removed to neat, clean, commodious quarters, and simultaneously the free delivery system was inaugurated and Peabody had received all the conveniences that she could fairly demand,—all that are accorded to municipalities of her size and importance anywhere.

In view of what has been done it is not strange that the public should resent any attempt at innovation.

When President Harrison took the oath of office usually administered to the Chief Magistrate of the United States, and assumed the responsibility of governing this greatest Republic upon the face of the earth, according to an ancient custom, he prepared and delivered an inaugural address which was supposed to voice the sentiments he held concerning the general scheme of government, and in that address he emphasized his belief in enforcement of reform of the civil service. He put himself on record then and there as an endorser of the doctrine that good, responsible, reliable and efficient officials should be retained in public service regardless of political views.

The sentiment enunciated by the President at that time was not entirely new; for some years it had been gaining ground in the minds of honest, utilitarian citizens and politicians, and it is more firmly rooted today than ever before. It finds deeper appreciation among Republicans, perhaps, than in the ranks of other parties.

But while there are wide differences of opinions upon the subject in the abstract, the instance at hand has cemented adherents of all parties and shades of opinion, in the belief that for the Peabody post office, no better rule could be applied.

Prominent Republicans are frequently heard to express the sentiment that the office is all right and should not be disturbed merely for party purposes, even if the applicant be just as good as the incumbent. The present incumbent suits the people, he has earned their esteem and the emoluments of the position. Why should he be disturbed?

He is a soldier and has a clean record for efficient service, but few will care for that. He has proven what he is capable of and that is sufficient.

R. F. McCrellis, Salem's popular caterer is a candidate for the Common Council from Ward 3.

Mrs. Ann Davis, at No. 6 Skerry street Salem, was severely burned on Friday evening by the dropping apart of a kerosene lamp which she was carrying. Mrs. Davis' injuries are to her head and shoulders principally. Though painful, they are not necessarily serious.

On Friday-afternoon, little Willie Pollock, a boy of seven years of age slipped and fell to the floor of Cadet hall, while at the Grand Army fair and broke his right arm at the elbow joint.

Stephen S. Bennett who resided at 83 North street Salem, was killed at Lynn on Monday evening while walking over the Washington street crossing of the B. & M. railroad. The remains after being examined at Corcoran & Haren's undertaking room were conveyed to Salem. Deceased was 67 years of age, and was employed by Wadleigh & Morse on North street Salem, until last spring. He leaves a widow, and four children by a former wife.

Nomination papers have been signed this week for Hon. R. S. Rantoul, for mayor of Salem. Messrs. West, Turner and Russell are the only members of the Aldermanic board who will be candidates for re-election. David N. Cook, Philip Little and Daniel J. O'Brien will be candidates for the vacancies.

Judge Davis of Gloucester in his inquest findings on the death of Joseph R. Peters, killed by the cars Nov. 1 says the Boston & Maine railroad is in no way at fault.

Salem Jail is more crowded than usual just at present 187 prisoners being confined there. The capacity of the institution is 150.

Company E, Eighth Regiment, of Beverly can honestly boast of one of the best equipped armories in the state. The building is on Thorndike street and was dedicated with interesting exercises yesterday.

There will be an all day shoot at the range of the Salem Rifle Association on Thanksgiving day, from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M., open to all comers.

School Discipline.

The Salem School Board adapted an order on Monday evening, prohibiting the infliction of corporal punishment in presence of other scholars.

Teachers Institute.

There was an interesting teachers' institute for high school teachers in the high school building at Salem on Friday.

Upwards of 125 teachers and school committee men were present. Mr. George H. Martin, of Lynn, the agent of the State Board of Education, opened the institute, and introduced Mr. Charles E. Adams, of the Salem Normal School, who with a class of four young ladies, illustrated his system of teaching chemistry accompanied by experiments with apparatus and chemicals. Mr. Martin continued with a talk upon English literature. He admitted that the tests were very difficult ones. He believed that reading in town school should prepare for the high schools work. It should be from standard literature. Teachers should train to methods of study, to observation and to comparison. Secretary J. W. Dickinson, of the State Board gave an address on "English Composition."

In the afternoon Mr. A. C. Boyden spoke upon Geology—laboratory and field work; W. C. Collar, of the Roxbury Latin School, on methods of teaching Latin; and Marguerite W. Abbott, of the Newton High School, on "French."

The meetings were of much interest and profits.

Death from a Bite.

About two months ago Eddie Stevens of Marblehead was bitten by a dog owned by Rev. S. Linton Bell. It was thought that the dog was afflicted with rabies. The boy has been unwell ever since being bitten and on Sunday he died of brain fever brought on by worrying over the dog.

The Warren Five Cents Savings bank holds a note of Asa P. Potter for $15,000. The bank has a surplus of $200,000 and is as solid as a rock, and the loss will not be felt by the depositors.—Salem News.

A Novel Cigar Cutter.

An ingenious device for cutting off the ends of cigars has been invented by Mr. E. H. Bellows of Salem. It consists of a cylinder perforated in four places with graded apertures to receive the cigar end, while inside, a tubular knife which has a spiral movement is operated by striking with the palm of the hand upon the top giving it a stamp motion. The spiral movement of the knife makes a drawing cut and hence leaves a smoother cleavage than that made by ordinary machines.

The Richest Man.

Who is the richest man living? Wall street would probably say that Jay Gould exceeds any other millionaire in the total of bonds and stocks in his possession, reckoning these securities at their par value. But a big percentage of his fortune, tens of millions of it, in fact, is in securities that are considerably below par, and that do not pay dividends. His ownership of enormous blocks of stocks is a matter of general knowledge. But if all his paper possessions were dumped on the market at once in settlement of his estate, great would be the fall thereof. That would be a sacrifice of values indeed. Some people look upon John D. Rockefeller as the wealthiest of Americans, and, therefore, the wealthiest of mortals. An intimate friend of his, also a millionaire, a cool, cautious, conservative man, told me some time ago that he estimated Mr. Rockefeller's fortune at about $125,000,000. He gave an interesting account of a wholesale transaction on the part of the Standard Oil Cereus, when he took an entire issue of railroad bonds of several millions of dollars on his own account. If Mr. Rockefeller is not the richest man living today, he may reach that distinction within ten years, for floods of treasure are pouring in upon him from every direction, and the total of his possessions goes leaping upward in great bounds. When the subject of gigantic fortunes is under discussion, of course the names of the Rothschilds are promptly mentioned, but although the aggregate wealth of that highly prolific family must run up far in the hundreds of millions, it is not in the least likely that any individual Rothschild is richer than Cornelius Vanderbilt.

In fact one of the best of all authorities on wealth, a gentleman who has undoubtedly rubbed shoulders familiarly with a greater number of millionaires than any other person living or dead, remarked to me within a few weeks, that he was sure that Cornelius Vanderbilt had a larger fortune than any other tenant of this planet. He was entirely familiar with the riches of the Rothschilds, and knew some of them personally. None of them could match Mr. Vanderbilt in plethora of millions. The scores of millions of Jay Gould and John D. Rockefeller did not equal Cornelius Vanderbilt's possessions. This gentleman, however, did not credit the estimate of John D. Rockefeller's wealth at $125,000,000. He thought it would hardly exceed half that amount. He looked upon Baron Hirsch as in the first rank of the world's millionaires, in fact not far from the very top. He was convinced that Baron Hirsch was the owner of at least $75,000,000.—New York Truth.

Golden Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. Isaiah Perkins of Georgetown celebrated the 50th anniversary of their nuptials at their home-stead on Monday and the house was filled with friends and well wishes from 3 o'clock until 6. A profusion of flowers made the residence look most inviting. They were presented by local friends with $50 in gold coins ranging from one dollar and upward. A solid gold spoon was brought by a lady friend from Canada.

Upon a large loaf of cake was the inscription 1841—1891. A photograph of a brother whom Mr. Perkins had not seen since 1824 was highly appreciated by the couple. Mr. Perkins was born in Deerfield N. H. in 1810. He has been an Odd Fellow for 47 years. Mrs. Perkins was a daughter of John Kimball of Bradford.

Handkerchiefs.

Stocks are at their best now, ready for the holiday trade.

A linen Handkerchief is what you need for real service, and REAL economy, and particularly if you mean the handkerchief to be a present—you'd feel rather cheap to send a friend "Linen" Handkerchiefs that proved to be frauds. Probably $5 out of every 100 Handkerchiefs in the market are "mull" or union—that is cotton or part cotton.

Plenty of all the initialed handkerchiefs now. It's the best time to choose among them. Judge of all by one—men's very fine linen, 3-4 inch hemstitching, embroidered and initial, at 25c. each.

A social gathering was held in the South church last Tuesday evening at which about one hundred members of the parish were present and notwithstanding the storm without, the early part of the evening, pleasure reigned within. The vestry was very handsomely decorated with a gorgeous display of chrysanthemums of many colors, sent down to grace the occasion by J. M. Ward, the florist, who formerly held the position of sexton of the church for many years. The beautiful display was admired by all and the place was never more attractively decorated. During the evening college glee were sung, Miss Sarah Woodbury rendered several piano selections, Miss Mabel Roberts rendered some solos and Maud Sinclair, who won the Demorest medal, entertained the gathering with recitations.

Catarrh

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed.

LOCAL LINES.

Maggie J. Driscoll entertained a party of friends on Wednesday, at her residence 33 Mason street, in commemoration of her birthday.

A temperance rally will be held in the large Town hall, to-morrow evening, under the auspices of the F. M. C. T. A. society, which will be addressed by Rev. P. A. McKenna of Marlboro', Chris. J. Fay, president of the Catholic union of Boston, and John P. Mahoney of Lowell, an earnest temperance worker of that city. The topic of the meeting will be the saloon.

Arthur E. Jackman, substitute letter carrier, is confined to the house threatened with typhoid fever.

Neil Leary of North Reading hired a black horse and Concord buggy of James C. Linehan a week ago yesterday and the police are now trying to find the turnout.

Over one hundred names appear on the postoffice petition in favor of Mr. Jackman, at George Stevens' corner fruit store, mostly Republicans. The other petition for the same party are largely signed by the same class of citizens.

Tickets for the Old Ladies' Home Fair are in great demand. The price for seasons with five admissions is but fifty cents.

The Emerson Club of Salem was given a reception on Monday evening by the Murray Association and a pleasant evening was passed at Universalist vestry.

The seventh annual assembly of the F. M. C. T. A. society will be held at Town Hall, Thanksgiving eve. An entertainment will be furnished from 8 to 9 o'clock, when the grand march will take place and dancing will continue until midnight, to the music of Mitchell's full orchestra. Cars will leave for Salem and Beverly at the close.

The new parochial school building is fast approaching completion. The scheme does not find universal favor amongst Catholics who have been educated in the public schools.

The Baldwin property on Foster street will not be sold at auction, as advertised last week circumstances having transpired since that time which have rendered a sale unnecessary.

James W. Wilkins and S. Walter Nourse of West Peabody and Mr. Howe of Middleton and some of the farm hands have been in Plymouth this week to testify in behalf of Frank C. Almy. Mr. Wilkins testimony was simply a corroboration of the theory set up by the defence, that the revolver in Almy's possession, were purchased in contemplation of a journey to Texas where he intended to become a ranchman.

Dr. O'Hearn left town to try his fate in Lawrence this week, after five or six months residence which has failed to attract to him a liberal patronage.

Gen. William Cogswell has returned to Washington D. C., where he will remain until the close of the next session of Congress.

The Brookside Club are selling a great many more tickets for the illustrated poem entertainment than they had expected.

The new Chautauque Circle has voted to hold meetings on alternate Tuesday evenings, at the Baptist vestry. The next meeting occurs on the first of December.

Assistant Postmaster John F. Moreland and Money Order Clerk John P. Murphy have compiled a neat pamphlet containing the postal rules, regulations, rates, time of arrival and departure of mails, distances of the principal post offices from Boston and the time required to reach them, Peabody and Salem Fire Alarms, Boston & Maine time table, showing time to and from Peabody and running time, and a great deal of other information of value and interest. The book contains the advertisements of the most enterprising business firms of the town as well as some from Salem. A great demand has been created for the book, but there are enough for all over 2000 having been issued.

Luther Plummer of the almshouse from the town of Newbury for the last twenty years, died at the institution last week, of consumption, at the age of about 60 years. He was a very industrious fellow and tended the fires and run on errands about the place. Plummer and his sister, who died at the almshouse about ten years ago, were twins and had the misfortune to be born foolish, an affliction which they never got over. Their parents left considerable money for their support, and they have been maintained by a guardian until their death. The estate is not yet exhausted.

The South Danvers National bank has recently purchased the very desirable Preston estate, 22 Main street, nearly opposite the Warren National bank, and in the spring will erect a good-sized brick building on the lot. The upper portion of the block will be planned with a view to letting it for lodge purposes, and it is not unlikely that it will be occupied by the Odd Fellows. The building in that location will be a great addition to the street, and everybody hopes that it marks the beginning of the boom that is going to strike Peabody, and make it one of the liveliest towns in the state. There is no reason why it shouldn't be such.

It has been suggested that the Republican hold a caucus and vote by ballot for the most popular candidate for postmaster. This method has been tried in other places.—Salem Evening News.

Wednesday was dividend day at the Warren Savings bank and money deposits commenced to draw interest from that time.

N. Ward Felton has been drawn to serve on the jury at the next term of Court at Salem.

Union post 50, G. A. R., was officially inspected Monday evening by H. H. Johnson of Haverhill, assisted by Post Commander Savage of Post 47. A delegation was over from Beverly and a collation was served following the inspection.

The regular monthly meeting of the Peabody Co-operative Bank will be held tonight in Allen's Block.

The Naumkeag Clothing Company, with a salesroom that covers nearly half an acre, and an enormous stock of clothing, hats, caps and gents' furnishings, have an advertisement of interest to purchasers on the first page. Their very complete stock in all grades of goods, and their strictly cash one price system of doing business, is a fair guarantee that the customer who trades there will be suited.

A son of Dr. C. R. Wood fell at the Gardner farm on Sunday receiving a compound fracture of one leg. Dr. Shreve attended him.

Jordan Lodge F. & A. M. visited Philanthropic Lodge of Marblehead on Tuesday evening, going by special car. The occasion was installation of officers. A pleasant time was enjoyed and the party returned at 12 o'clock.

Gospel Temperance.

Rev. A. F. Welch gave a temperance address at the Universalist church last Sabbath evening, in which he commended the work by the W. C. T. U., but he took exceptions to their alliance with political organizations, referring particularly to the alliance between the Union and the Prohibitory party. He thought such alliance imposed burdens upon the Union that were more than they should be called upon to carry. It involved not only the question of prohibition which is periodically paraded before the public in such a way as to make the subject ridiculous, but also introduced the female suffrage issue into the work of missionary or educational temperance where it had no place. That issue should stand and be tried separately and upon its own merits.

He believed restrictive measures should go along side by side with temperance education, until public sentiment was ready for prohibition, when it could be successfully inaugurated.

His address was intensely interesting and won the commendation of all in reach of his voice.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed condition you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed. Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free, F. J. CHENEY, & CO., Toledo, O. Sold by druggists, 75 cts.

THE HANDS.

The Attributes of a Beautiful Hand and How to Secure Them.

The chief attributes of a beautiful hand as sung by bards and written of by novelists in the description of their heroines, seem to be whiteness, smallness or shapeliness. The first and last of these qualifications can be acquired, although Dame Nature may have withheld the fairly proportion so much admired.

Roughness, hardness and redness are often attributed to the male hand by writers. In "Paradise Lost" there is an allusion to "his red right hand." Climate also has a great deal to do with the color and texture of the skin. It may often be noticed what white, slim hands are possessed by American and Anglo-Indian ladies. The enforced idleness induced by tropical heat, or other causes pertaining to modes of life and climate, certainly do produce these white, slender hands.

A great many whitening applications are on the market, some being highly lauded. Before, however, purchasing any unguents, we would advise ladies to borrow some of their fathers' or brothers' evening gloves. For a month or six weeks these gloves should be worn in bed. Apply any good whitening preparation, after washing the hands in warm water and using some good soap. Rub in the whitening unguent, giving an extra rubbing to the backs of the hands. Anything of a greasy nature well rubbed in tends to fatten, and so a thin hand can be made softer.

Draw the fingers out, and if the tips are flat pinch them persistently, making the object of the process to obtain a hogbacked nail. Careful manicuring, of course, makes the nails themselves pretty, but excessive manicuring is injurious. Lastly, draw on the gloves, which naturally will be much too big, and fasten them as long as no sense stopping the circulation is felt.

Glycerin and rose water, mixed in the proportions of one-third glycerin to two-thirds rose water, is very good for the hands. The great secret of success in skin unguents is to find out what suits individual cuticles and use it.

On going to bed young ladies who suffer from red arms and elbows, or that ugly appearance like mottled soap, should thoroughly massage them with their toilet cream or pomade, and then quickly powder with any reliable powder.

Method of Sterilizing Milk.

To kill all the bacteria usually found in milk—and there is always a wonderfully great and diversified army of them—it requires to be heated a few minutes at about 224 degs. F. A special steam sterilizer is necessary to attain such a high temperature. The same effects may be obtained usually by boiling the milk about thirty minutes. Heating a few minutes between 188 degs. and 176 degs. is sufficient to destroy temporarily the energy of a large number of milk microbes, including several disease germs, but does not kill many of them, and is not, therefore, sufficient as a preservative means. This is the temperature (about 167 degs.), the application of which is known as pasteurization.

The Bacteriological World, authority for the foregoing, says that it is not only to destroy disease germs that sterilization is indicated. Indeed, in infant feeding it is chiefly to prevent the irritative action of acid produced by microbes or germs of all kinds, whether truly milk ferments, pathogenic bacteria, or organisms harmless under ordinary circumstances.

Milk coagulates, acidifies, under the influence of vegetative phenomena of various ferment organisms. The acid produced has the most baneful action on the delicate stomach and intestinal canal of the child. Sterilization of fresh milk destroys the property of the germs before any acid is produced by their process of nutrition.

LADIES' LUNCHEON.

How to Seat the Guests and an Attractive Menu for the Occasion.

At a ladies' luncheon the hostess takes the head of the table and places the guest of honor at her right hand.

Unless cards are used, the hostess should have so clear an idea in her own mind of where each guest is to sit as to be able to direct them to their places without confusion. It is not necessary for the guests to go in in couples. The hostess usually takes the guest of honor, and the others may fall into line as they please.

Harpur's Bazar, which is authority for the foregoing, says that "A pretty lunch might comprise bouillabaisse, small squares of fried halibut and Parisian potatoes; either sweetbread patties, broiled chicken, or lamb chops with green peas; tomato mayonnaise salad, ices or charlotte russe, or some other dessert; fruit and coffee; salted almonds and olives as hors d'oeuvres. The entree may be omitted if desired.

Hints About Invitations.

Invitations to small and rather informal entertainments can be written on a lady's visiting card with perfect propriety, according to an authority on "Manners," though informal notes are more customary. In inviting the different members of a family the name of the daughter or daughters is frequently placed after that of the parents on a card of invitation, but a son should always receive a separate card. When several sisters in a family receive an invitation addressed to "The Misses," it is usually understood that not more than two of them will avail themselves of the invitation. Invitations for any general entertainment sent to a country house where guests are stopping are as a rule addressed to "Mr. and Mrs. Green and party," this invitation including the sons and daughters of the house as well as the visitors.

NOTICE.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.
Essex ss. PROBATE COURT.
To Daniel Goodwin, of Peabody, in said County.

WHEREAS, complaint has been made to said Court, by the Selectmen of the town of Peabody, in said County, and Sarah A. Spaulding of said Peabody, that in their judgment, you do, by drinking, gaming, idleness, so spend, waste, and lessen your estate, as to expose yourself and family to want or suffering; and do thereby expose said town of Peabody to charge or expense for your and their support; and praying that Willard Spaulding of said Peabody, or some other suitable person may be appointed your Guardian, agreeably to the law in such case made and provided.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be holden at Salem, in and for said county of Essex, on the first Monday of December next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why a Guardian should not be appointed as aforesaid.

And said Selectmen are hereby directed to cause said Daniel Goodwin to be notified of the time and place appointed for the hearing of said complaint, by serving him with a copy of this order, fourteen days at least, before said Court, if he can be found within said Commonwealth; and if he cannot be so found, by publishing this citation in the Peabody Press, a newspaper printed at Peabody, once a week for three weeks, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, Rollin E. Harmon, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this sixth day of November, in the year eighteen hundred and ninety-one.

Mortgagee's Sale.

By virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed, given by Bridget Ray to John W. Porter dated the twentieth day of February, A. D. 1883, and recorded with Essex Deeds, Southern District, Book 1102, Leaf 156, and assigned to John C. Campbell, November 17th, 1891, and for breach of the condition of said mortgage deed, will be sold at public auction, on the first parcel of land hereinafter described, on the twenty-first day of December, A. D. 1891, at two of the clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises described in said deed, to wit:—

A certain parcel of land situated in Peabody, Massachusetts, bounded as follows: viz., beginning at the corner of land, lately conveyed by Martha S. Putnam to the Town of Peabody and the lane which runs westerly from Andover street, near Fulton's corner; thence running south easterly by said land of the Town of Peabody, two hundred and fifty-eight (258) feet, to a cherry tree by land now or formerly of heirs of M. Wilson; thence by said Wilson's land, land or late of Stephen N. Proctor and land now or late of Moses Preston in different courses to said lane, thence north easterly by said lane to the point began at, containing about two and one half acres.

Also another parcel of land in said Peabody bounded as follows: viz., beginning at a point on Prospect street one hundred and twenty feet distant, south westerly as the wall stands from the burying ground; thence running by said street and wall north easterly to the burying ground, thence north westerly by the wall as they stand by said burying ground, by land now or formerly of Felton, and land now or formerly of Elijah Wilson, six hundred and forty-two feet and eleven inches to land now or formerly of heirs of M. Wilson; thence south westerly by land of said heirs one hundred and forty-one feet by the wall as it now stands; thence south easterly in a direct line by land formerly of Richard S. Rogers, five hundred and eighty-two feet and two inches to the point began at, containing about one acre, three rods and thirty-eight and one half rods. Said premises are sold subject to the agreement between John Ray and Daniel Kilcommons recorded with Essex County Deeds—Southern District, Book 597, Leaf 133, and to a mortgage to Martha I. Putnam, the consideration of which is One Thousand and Fifty Dollars.

SULPHUR BITTERS

THE GREAT German Remedy

TRUTHS FOR THE SICK.

For those deathly Bilious Spills depend on SULPHUR BITTERS, it will cure you.

Do you suffer with that tired and all gone feeling? If so, use SULPHUR BITTERS, it will cure you.

Operatives who are closely confined in the mills and workshops, clerks who do not procure sufficient exercise, and all who are confined indoors, should use SULPHUR BITTERS. They will not then be weak and sickly.

If you do not wish to suffer from Rheumatism, use a bottle of SULPHUR BITTERS; it never fails to cure.

Don't be without a bottle. Try it; you will not regret it.

Ladies in delicate health, who are all run down, should use SULPHUR BITTERS. And feel better for it.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

As the sun is superior to the stars, so DANA'S is superior to all other Sarsaparillas.

At Last.

The long expected illustrated History of Utah by the eminent historian, Hubert H. Bancroft, has at last appeared. It is absolutely a revelation. After visiting the field in person, taking testimony impartially from all sides, critically reviewing the enormous number of 1000 different authorities, and searching many of the secret archives of the Mormon Church, Mr. Bancroft now gives to the World this wonderful and remarkable work the only true history or Mormonism published. The work reads like a romance—the wonderful adventures of trappers and travelers, the bloody Indian wars, the thrilling accounts of massacres, and miraculous escapes, the famous Danite Association or Destroying Angels, the story of Brigham Young—all this fresh from the pen of the brilliant and gifted author forms a narrative of exciting interest, as fascinating as a novel yet true to the letter. Above all in surpassing interest is the unfolding of the great Mormon question and the mysteries of Polygamy, which will be read with eager interest by all classes of people throughout the English speaking world. The work is published in one large handsome volume of 800 pages, bound in red and gold, and grandly illustrated with steel-plate portraits of the great Mormon leaders, exquisite half-tone engravings and dazzling colored plates. It is issued by the great Publishing House of the Pacific Coast—The History Company of San Francisco, and can only be procured through their authorized agents. We call attention to the advertisement in another column, under heading of $25.00 Reward.

The Author as a Side-Show.

Is it not, when one comes to think about it, carrying the charitable appeal to rather a shrill pitch to ask an author to make a free contribution of himself to what is known as author's readings? In the author's readings what attracts is usually, not the composition or the elocution, but the author's personality. The author's reading imposes upon the author the task of exhibiting, not his talents or achievements, but himself; of stepping before a company of curious spectators and showing them whether he is tall or short, fat or lean, fair or dark, well-bred or ill-clad, easy or awkward; whether he is the man they fancied him as they followed him in his writings, or whether he is not. So far as the nature of the service is concerned, the case were no different were he called upon to stand behind a brass rail at the Eden Musee, like the World's Rulers done in wax, and be scrutinized from crown to corn.—From "The Point of View," Scribner's Magazine.

The Best Authorities.

"It leads them all," is the greatest reply of druggists when asked about the merit or sales of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Such as Dr. Dio Lewis, Prof. Gross, and others, agree that catarrh is not a local but a constitutional disease. It is therefore requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which effectually and permanently cures catarrh. Thousands praise it.

Hood's Pills cure liver ill, jaundice, biliousness, sick headache, constipation and all troubles of the digestive organs.

Making Hogs Produce Pepsin.

The pepsin sold in the drug stores is the veritable product of an animal stomach, and generally of the stomach of a hog. One factory in New York has the oddest method of preparing the article that ever entered the human mind, says the St. Louis Globe Democrat. A number of perfectly healthy hogs are fattened for market, and for 36 hours before killing time they are deprived of all food, not even being allowed a drop of water. Then the trough from which they are accustomed to eat is covered with a strong wire netting, and the most appetizing slops and hog delicacies, smoking hot, are poured into the trough.

The fumes ascend with grateful fragrance to the porcine nostrils, the hogs all run to the trough and stand over it, ravenous with hunger, squealing and fighting with each other for a chance to get at the slops. The iron netting prevents them from tasting the food, and, while they are still thinking about the matter, they are killed, and their stomachs being taken out, are found perfectly full of gastric juice, from which the pepsin is prepared. Now, if it was not the hog's imagination that made the gastric juice flow into his stomach in anticipation of a feast, what was it.

A MYSTERY EXPLAINED.

The papers contain frequent notices of rich, pretty and educated girls eloping with negroes, cramps and coachmen. The well-known specialist, Dr. Franklin Miles, says all such girls are more or less hysterical, nervous, very impulsive, unbalanced: usually subject to headache, neuralgia, sleeplessness, immoderate crying or laughing. These show a weak nervous system for which there is no remedy equal to Restorative Nervine. Trial bottles and a fine book containing many marvelous cures, free at William T. Lee's, who also sells, and guarantees Dr. Miles' celebrated New Heart Cure, the finest of heart tonics. Cures fluttering, short breath, etc.

How to Invest Money.

When you have saved one hundred, or two hundred, or five hundred dollars look about for a good investment, says Henry Clews, the New York banker, in the October Ladies' Home Journal. Do not take up this or that scheme at a venture, but examine it carefully, and if you see your way clear, put your money into it. Real estate is usually a good investment. More money has been made in real estate than you could estimate in a day. A first mortgage is, in nine cases out of ten, safe. But take advice on the subject before you invest. Go to some good conservative man and get his views. I should advise the same course if you should put your money in stocks or bonds, or railroad shares. In fact, I should urge, before you invest a penny, that you get the best counsel on the subject to aid you in taking the right course.

If your first investment prosper, by careful management, and by always being on the alert, you can increase your fortune by reinvesting your profits.

A boy stood on the burning deck, Unwisely, too, 'tis said, For, with the fast approaching flame, His elders quickly fled. So, many now in peril stand, Unmindful of their fate, Till, step by step, Grim Death comes on And then alas! too late! Far wiser, surely, would it seem, When his approach we see, With "Pierce's Pellets" well in hand To vanquish old "G. D."

Pierce's Pleasant Pellets have remarkable power to correct all physical derangements, thus warding off disease that would surely follow. Purely vegetable, pleasant to take, perfectly harmless! With a little forethought, they'll be a present help in time of need—cheating the doctor and robbing the grave! As a Liver Pill, they are unequalled. Smallest cheapest, easiest to take. One a dose as a laxative, three or four as a cathartic. Tiny sugar-coated granules, in vials; 25cts With health and beauty laden, A rich and priceless thing, To women, pale and wasted, My precious gift I bring.

Such the object and such the mission of woman's valued friend, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Don't let unreasonable prejudice prevent you from sharing the health and beauty proffered in good faith, by this most excellent Remedy! None of the almost countless weaknesses and diseases peculiar to women, but that readily yield to its magical power! Manufactured, recommended, sold through druggists, and guaranteed by the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., to give satisfaction, in every case, or money paid for it cheerfully refunded.

Stocking Yellowstone Park Waters.

In our columns of Nov. 13, 1890, we announced the planting of 70,000 yearling fish of the salmon family, by the Fish Commission, in the waters of the National Park. It is gratifying to learn that this experiment, in continuation of the work accomplished in 1889, has been eminently successful. Commissioner McDonald sent Prof. B. W. Evermann to the region last summer to ascertain and report upon the results of the planting, and has received a communication to the effect that specimens of brook, Loch Leven, rainbow and black-spotted trout were found in the stocked streams, and all of them in excellent condition, showing that the surroundings are favorable and the future of the fish promising. Information was obtained from Mr. Elwood Hofer that he had discovered trout in Nez Perce Creek Nov. 9. These are the Von Behr or brown trout (salmo fario). The brook and Loch Leven trout, which were planted in 1889, must have spawned in 1890, for yearling fish of these species were collected by Prof. Evermann. The high temperature and mineral character of the of Twin Lakes apparently proved fatal to the whitefish brought there from Horse Thief Springs, Montana, and the Yellowstone River contingent probably fell victims to the voracious trout which abound in that stream. In the fall of 1890 Shoshone Lake received a plant of about 24,000 lake trout from Northville, Mich., and Lewis Lake was supplied with about 12,000 lake trout and 3,350 Loch Levens from the same station. The Loch Leven trout were found in goodly numbers in Heron Creek, a tributary of Shoshone Lake, and Mr. Hofer saw trout rise in the Shoshone, Oct. 7, about 75 yards from the shore. The evidence of successful planting and of conditions favorable to the growth and multiplication of trout and salmon in Park waters is conclusive, and we trust that the work will be regarded as no longer experimental, but practical, and will be pushed with renewed vigor.—Forest and Stream.

A Little Girl's Experience in A Lighthouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Loren Trescott are keepers of the Gov. Lighthouse at Sand Beach, Mich., and are blessed with a daughter, four years old. Last April she was taken down with Measles, followed with a dreadful Cough and turning into a Fever. Doctors at home and at Detroit treated her, but in vain, she grew worse rapidly, until she was a mere "handful of bones."—Then she tried Dr. King's New Discovery and after the use of two and half bottles, she was completely cured. They say Dr. King's New Discovery is worth its weight in gold, yet you may get a trial bottle free at Wm. T. Lee's drug store.

How to Make Money.

A man who is wise, careful, and conservative, energetic, persevering and tireless, need have no fear of his future, writes Henry Clews, the New York banker, in the October Ladies' Home Journal. But there is one other thing. He must have a steady head, one that can weather the rough sea of reverses from which no life is altogether free, and one that will not become too big when success attends his efforts. Keep out of the way of speculators. Take your money, whether it be much or little, to one whose reputation will insure you good counsel. Invest your money where the principal is safe and you will get along. But don't forget the acorns. It is from little acorns that great oaks grow. See that you begin aright early in life. Save your money with regularity. By so doing, you will make money.

The object of the manufacturers of Dobbins' Electric Soap has been, ever since 1869, to make it

of such superior quality that it will give universal satisfaction. Have they succeeded? Millions of unsolicited letters from women all over the country, and foreign countries, giving it unqualified praise, as the "very best, very purest, and most economical soap ever used" by the writers, give an affirmative answer to the above question. If you cannot accept the experience of millions who use it, after the twenty-three years it has been on the market, one trial will convince you.

IMPORT-ANT

For washing flannels there is absolutely no other soap that compares at all with Dobbins' Electric.

All other soaps shrink

and turn yellow all woolen goods like flannels and blankets. If you use Dobbins' Electric Soap, and no other, and follow directions, your flannels will always remain as white and as soft as when new.

I. L. GRAGIN,

A Dearth of Fish in Paris.

It is an age of adulteration, says the Paris correspondent of the Sunday

Telegraph. The wine sold in some of the Paris restaurants is chemically prepared, and enterprising food purveyors concoct plain for the production of artificial oysters and of fraudulent snails

upposed to come from Burgundian

vineyards. It is therefore not surprising to find that the excellent dish of fish known as a friture de Seine is no longer what it seems and purports to be. For years past many a restaurateur and innkeeper has lived on his reputation for preparing savory and appetizing

fruits of gudgeon, barbel and whitebait, the fish being always fresh from the water. According to the authorized anglers who use nets in the Seine, the take of local fish is becoming scarcer every year. The few specimens of the finny tribe occasionally brought

and sold at an exorbitant rate, and the consequence is that vendors of fritures

de Seine have to buy in the Halles

Centrales, fish brought in ice from Holland. Epicures who seek hostilities long the banks of the Seine, where they hope to lunch off fried whitebait

and gudgeon, are accordingly forewarned

of not foraging, against any attempts of riparian Bonifaces to palm off on them as a genuine local dish the friture

composed of promiscuous fish from the Dutch canals. Thus, another Parisian legend is being gradually undermined,

and Sine fritters will in time be argued frauds as the platypus of outer suburban districts once praised by Beranger and Paul de Kock. The local death of fish is attributed by anglers of all kind, who in the warm September days huddle the banks of the rivers

Seine and Marne, to several causes.

The introduction of the penny steamboats first interfered with the fish in general, and more recently the cold and wet summer played havoc with barbel and gudgeon. The honest men who use nets, moreover, complain that they are not allowed to fish at night, the time when the poachers, careless about licenses are setting authority at naught, literally scour the river with their effective but prohibited apparatus for catching gudgeon. The Incorporated

Anglers have now petitioned the minister of public works to allow them to go out at night and complete with the boachers. Pending any official intervention in their behalf, the fishermen have had the weather working for them, and after recent experiences of torrid heat in autumn, they can hardly continue to complain that the water is too cold for their victims.

HEIGHT OF CRUELTY.

Nervous women seldom receive the sympathy they deserve. While often the picture of health, they are constantly ailing. To withhold sympathy from these unfortunates is the height of cruelty.

They have a weak heart, causing the shortness of breath, fluttering, pain in side, weak and hungry spells, and finally swelling of ankles, oppression, choking, smothering and dropsy. Dr. Miles'

New Heart Cure is just the thing for

And prices make the buying easy.

The most beautiful creations of the Japanese artist artisans, such choice and elegant things as they make for their own use, and many things particularly manufactured for us.

We hesitate not in saying that there is no rival exhibition in New England. New York or Boston do not contain the like of some of the most beautiful articles that are in our collection. Genuine wares of Kawashima, Imiada, Hizen, Tokanabe, Satsuma, Kaga, Seto, Imari, Katsan, Aizu, Omi, Owar, Kinto, Awaji, Banko, Rikosan.

Beside fine screens, portieres, lacquer work, silver bronze ware and jewelry, tea trays and cabinets, baskets, games, puzzles, toys, paper knives, chop sticks, incense, lanterns, in fact, everything that would be found in a porcelain shop, lacquer shop, jewelry shop, and toy shop in far-away Japan.

Many articles in ancient pottery, wood and ivory carvings, Inos, etc.

Mr. Matsuki will preside over this feast of artistic Oriental beauty on Opening Day, in his native Japanese costume, and will be assisted by two Japanese misses, Otake and Hiro Takayanagi, also in the attire of their native country.

We do most heartily hope to see you here on Monday next.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL

PARK THEATRE

Seats are all sold for Thanksgiving performance; houses packed every night and at Saturday matinee; excursion parties from 20 to 200 ordering seats weeks in advance; and an eager line of buyers present daily at the box office.

Such is the record of the phenomenal business done and still doing by Neil Burgess and his "County Fair" at the Park Theatre. Monday evening next Mr. Burgess enters upon the 13th week of his Boston season. Business up to date has exceeded that of the same length of time in New York City, and it is evident that every man, woman and child feels that Aunt Abby and the other quaint and humorous characters in the "County Fair" bring them nearer to nature. Laughter spontaneous and wholesome punctuate the performance from beginning to end.

TREMONT THEATRE

On Monday night next, Nov. 23, when begins at the Tremont the last week of the engagement of the incomparably excellent organization, Russell's New Comedians, in the best production of its kind extant, there will also be a festival celebration, for that evening marks the presentation in Boston of this most famous national farce-comedy, "The New Directory." Manager John H. Russell, and Managers Abby & Schofield have in preparation for presentation to each lady in attendance a beautiful and artistic souvenir, and the occasion will be a grand and gala one in every possible way.

The second festival is National and especially New England's, Thanksgiving and on this day, Thursday, Nov. 26, there will be given extra matinee at 2.

For the last week of his engagement at the Tremont, in which these two festival occasions occur, Manager Russell will present some entirely new scenes, acts, specialties and features, and there will be many a good thing, novel and bright, for a Thanksgiving festival, while all the best and brightest of the past performances will be retained.

The success which Augustus Thomas's American play, "Alabama," has achieved in this country is probably without parallel under like conditions. It was an earlier work of its author and had to wait for a recognition. When, however, the recognition came it was so emphatic and great that the play's place in the library of works by American authors was at once given among the very first.

"Alabama" will soon be seen at the Tremont, and Boston's judgment upon it is certain to be enthusiastically one of the warmest praise.

BOSTON MUSEUM.

On Monday night, when "Lady Bountiful" was presented at the Boston Museum, the play was also given at the New York Lyceum. In both places the play appears to have achieved success. Here it was praised as a work well suited for intellectual taste, natural and interesting in story and strong in its character drawing. In New York Wm. Winter pronounced the work "full of human feeling, a picture of persons who are generally veritable," while the other papers also expressed admiration for its good tone and its effects as a study of life. Here Mr. Boniface, as the rough, good-hearted riding school proprietor, and Miss Addison, as his uncultured but faithful loving wife, made the "hits" of the evening. There Augustine Cook, the impersonator of the horse groom, and Charles Walcott as the riding school master, made the "hits." Performances commence at 7.45 and close at 10.40 P. M.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

Harry Lacy in the noble character of "Jack Royal of the 92d" took the audience by storm at the Grand Opera House this week. The support throughout is first class. J. H. Bunney as Optimus Breeze an opulent stockholder in the Manhattan Iron Company with his whimsical outbursts was provokingly funny and made one laugh in spite of the absurdity of the situation. He was a character drawn from opulent half indolence in real life. Harry Hotta as "Judge Illwind" another stockholder, had a quaint, grim humor in his character that added a spice to the grave situations with which the play abounds. Myron Calice as "Colvey Harnett" a coldblooded betrayer of confidence, played his role admirably, and the heroine of the drama, Miss Kate Delaplaine found a fitting impersonator in Miss May Hampton. The plot is located in New York, in 1863, and Jack Royal the Col. of the 92d arrives upon the scene to take charge of the Manhattan Iron works. Upon whose contracts depends the timely completion of the "Monitor," and quells a labor disturbance that has threatened to wreck the works and frustrate the government plans. It is a striking picture of the labor question and introduces a variety of characters, from the highest types of heroism to the lowest examples of depravity.

The next attraction is East Lynne.

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE

Mr. and Mrs. Kendal, whose most entertaining efforts of a few months ago are yet ripe in our memories, make their reappearance at the Hollis Street Theatre next Monday night. It is a pleasure to welcome the return of such accomplished and artistic members of the dramatic profession as Mr. and Mrs. Kendal. On the occasion of their former visit the theatre proved inadequate to hold those desiring to attend and many were turned away unable to gain admission. Those London favorites have made professional tour of the country and everywhere been most kindly received by large and appreciative audiences. They have steadily grown in popularity and their artistic performances have developed charms not common to our stage now. Mr. and Mrs. Kendal and their adequate company are to appear during this engagement in a more varied and excellent group of new plays. The opening bill will be "The Ironmaster" in which both Mr. and Mrs. Kendal appeared to fine advantage during their previous visits to Boston. Other pieces will soon be given in the following order: Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, the new version of Sidney Grundy's play, "A White Lie," Thursday matinee, (Thanksgiving Day,) "The Ironmaster;" Thursday, Friday evenings and Saturday matinee, "A Scrap of Paper" and Saturday night a double bill consisting of two plays, "The Queen's Shilling" and "A Happy Pair." For the second last week Monday and Tuesday nights and the Wednesday matinee, Mr. and Mrs. Kendal will appear for the first time in this city in Tom Taylor's famous comedy, "Still Water's Run Deep;" Wednesday evening (only time), "The Weaker Sex;" Thursday and Saturday nights, "All For Her;" Friday evening, only time, and Saturday matinee, "The Ironmaster" will be given for the last time.

A notable feature of the success of "Mr. Wilkinson's Widows" at the Columbia is the remarkable attractiveness it has for women. Not only do they monopolize most of the seats at the matinees, but at the evening performances they sometimes outnumbered the men. It is no unusual thing to see several boxes filled by exclusive parties of ladies. Apart from the fun of the play itself there seemed to be something irresistibly attractive to the female mind in the peculiar vicissitudes of the young widows and the mysterious way in which their experience was not explained at the drop of the curtain. Those who have seen Mrs. Georgie Drew Barrymore and Miss Emily Bancker, as the charming widows, express no surprise that "late lamented Mr. Wilkinson" should have been weak enough to forget his duties to morals and society by marrying both. Miss Annie Wood as "the C U K E," is a delicious and artistic bit of character work, and the same may be said of Miss Ferguson's maid. Messrs. Holland, Burns and Ryling are inimitable in their respective roles. "Mr. Wilkinson's Widows" remains but one week longer.

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhoea and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

Dr. G. C. Osceola,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

Dr. J. F. Kitchener,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. Archer, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

FANCY WORK.

Odds and Ends of Ribbon Transformed Into a Variety of Taking Articles.

Any one who wants to make up small articles for bazaars and church sales of fancy work or for pretty and useful little Christmas gifts among friends should investigate her collection of ribbons, for there are few materials that can be utilized to such good advantage. Many things can be made of bits of ribbon that are very saleable and popular.

First, there are the small cube pincushions, all six sides exactly the same size, and each side generally formed of four little pieces of silk stretched over a card and beautifully sewn together, the size of each piece three-eighths of an inch square; the pincushion finished measures three-quarters of an inch. They can be made larger.

Then there are the small round pincushions made in sections, and sewn together with a piece of narrow ribbon between. Another cushion suitable to a writing table and more novel is to procure a small doll, form the skirt of its dress of the bits of ribbon, sewn together with colored silks; stretch the skirt over several thicknesses of flannel, roll round till these form the petticoats the size of the cushion (a flat piece will be required for it to stand on); put the doll in at the top and add the waist to the dress; if the skirt was stretched on thin cardboard and filled with black sewing silk, it would make an excellent pen-wiper.

Strips of ribbon applied to common ticking, with an embroidered scroll pattern between the strips, are very pretty for sachets, cushions and the like.

Excellent book markers are made with strips of narrow ribbon sewn together, a small ornamental button with shank at the ends.

A bunch of little scent bags made of scraps of silk or ribbon is effective and pretty, and babies' bells for sale at bazaars can be arranged as follows: Tie some small bells onto lengths of ribbon, then gather them together in a bunch and fix them to a stick, previously covered in some way, with worsted or ribbon.

Monograms for Marking Linen.

Ornamental monograms for marking house and table linen, charmingly delineated in Japanese style, consist of letters in designs of bamboo stalks with decorations of birds in various positions, each holding a spray of foliage and berries. To this device is attached an escutcheon inclosing a smaller letter standing for a Christian name, the whole being reproduced in white or colored silks or cottons, effectively set off with washing gold thread. The colors must harmonize with either the toilet set, bed hangings or dinner service. These letters are really adaptable to every kind of decorative work where painting and embroidery are called into requisition.

MONOGRAM IN JAPANESE STYLE.

In embroidery there are several ways of executing these initials. Crewel work can be used for the birds, and a well padded satin stitch for the jointed stems of the bamboo as well as for the leaves and berries, or in a lighter way the twist stitch outlines the rounded coil and encircles it at intervals, the inside being filled in with the seed stitch; or, again, applique work offers another mode of displaying to great advantage this uncommon design, and in this case the bird may be painted if preferred.

Finishing and Cleaning Embroidery.

Embroideries that are just finished and taken from the frame frequently have a drawn appearance from some of the stitches being too tight. To obtain the smoothness which the completed work ought to have, careful stretching or pressing of the foundation is necessary. In many cases stretching the material over a smooth board covered with flannel or a clean cloth will remedy the difficulty, using thumb tacks along the edges to hold it in place. Let it remain several days, then remove, cover the face with tissue paper and roll it around a smooth stick. Do not iron new embroidery if it can be avoided; if it cannot, press it on the wrong side over two or three layers of flannel spread on the ironing board.

Gold lace and gold embroidery which are so effective in fancy work may be brightened up after they become tarnished with rock alum that has been burned, then powdered fine and sifted. Dip a clean soft brush into the powder and rub the gold lace briskly; afterward wipe with a clean soft flannel.

Crewel embroidery on linen or crash is nicely washed with bran water without soap or soda. Pour a gallon of boiling water over a pound of bran and leave it to soak for a day, stirring it occasionally. Strain the bran water through a coarse towel and use it lukewarm to wash the crewel work. Do not wring it, but squeeze and press it gently through the hands. Dry near the fire and iron on the wrong side while damp, letting the embroidery press into thick flannel. Exposure to sunlight while drying is likely to fade the colors.

Potato Puff.

Potato puff is by many considered an improvement upon the usual way of making mashed potatoes. Stir over the fire until well mixed and hot two cupfuls mashed potato, the yolks of two eggs, three tablespoonfuls of cream, one tablespoonful of butter, with seasoning of salt and pepper. Add gradually the whites, well beaten, stir all well together, place in a buttered dish and bake in a quick oven till nicely browned.

Oyster Macaroni.

For oyster macaroni, wash and boil one-quarter pound of macaroni; when done line a baking dish with it, then add a layer of bread crumbs, seasoned with butter, salt and pepper, next a layer of oysters, and again macaroni and oysters, letting the last layer be of bread crumbs. Pour on one glass of milk and place in the oven.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY, JUN.

William McKinley who won the most notable Republican victory in the late campaign is perhaps the best known American of our time. His name is a household word in our country and in Europe the man who gave his name to our new Tariff Bill is both feared and hated.

Governor McKinley was born at Niles, Ohio, on the 26th of February 1844 at the outbreak of the civil war he enlisted in the 23d Ohio Regiment, and was mustered out of the same regiment as Major in September in 1865—Governor McKinley was a member of the 45, 46, 47th 48th, 49th, 50th Congresses, and was re-elected to the 57th Congress.—McKinley is the leading Prohibitionist on this continent, and is looming up as a Presidential candidate for next year.

White Caps at Lynnfield.

White caps made an official visitation one night last week to Richard Ruggles of Lynnfield and taking him from bed, conveyed him to a lonely spot where they pulled a bag over his head to remind him of tar and feathers. No particular harm was done the individual, but he concluded to make complaint and have the band arrested. Accordingly he visited Lynn and lodged his complaint and detectives were detailed to investigate the case, who upon visiting the neighborhood found such damaging evidence of crime against Ruggles and his step-daughter, that he was arrested, and his accomplices criminals secured as a witness against him.

He was brought before Judge Merrill who declined to take jurisdiction as Lynnfield had trial justice and the case was removed to the latter court where he was held for appearance before the Superior Court.

Shall It Be Widened?

Saturday afternoon the Selectmen took up the hearing upon the laying out and widening of Railroad avenue, which has been continued from time to time to accommodate Mr. Northend who appeared in behalf of the Boston & Lowell railroad lessees.

Mr. Northend interposed no objection, but when questioned as to whether or not the railroad company would ask for damages, his reply was non committal. He said that on principle the company would refuse to assent to anything, but he did not leave it clear to the minds of all the members of the Board, that damages would not be claimed, although that seemed to be the general impression gleaned from his remarks.

It would be decidedly cheeky upon the part of the company to ask damages, as the patrons of the railroad would receive for greater advantage from the improvements than the general public. Moreover, the railroad made an agreement many years ago, to do what the town now proposes to do, but as the agreement cannot be found, it is thought possible, the obligation was released some years later, when a subsequent purchase was made of Mr. Crowninshield, with whom the original covenant was made.

Another agreement entered into by railroad which is still in force, presents some fine legal questions, which in practice however will, probably never be raised for judicial determination. When the land in the immediate vicinity of the avenue was purchased by the Lowell railroad, an agreement was made to throw open a way which is substantially the location proposed to be laid out by the selectmen. By the terms of that covenant the railroad contributed five feet of its "location," the other parties to the agreement contributing 35 feet.

The 5 feet referred to have been used by the public for forty years, which, under ordinary circumstances would forever bar the possibility of disturbance, but as no prescriptive title can be gained by any period of time against a railroad location, the question might be raised should the land be condemned, whether or not the agreement made with private parties for public purposes removed the case from the general rule. This strip of land will always have to be kept open so it can be used by the public, whether taken by the town as a part of the way or not, as teams have to pass over it in getting to the freight cars.

Should the selectmen lay out the way, quite a portion of the Goldthwaite brook will have to be bridged by a stone culvert, which will be the largest item of expense in the whole job. The old carpenter shop and blacksmith shops would have to be moved back, and the shed in front of Smith's would probably have to be torn down.

It is doubtful if the improvement will be made at present.

Harvard Not In It.

Harvard was not in it at Springfield, Saturday, where Yale took the football game 10 to 0.

Colonel French's Estate.

On Tuesday Colonel Jonas H. French recorded conveyances of five parcels of land at Gloucester, which he has held in trust for the Cape Ann Granite Company, to that company, the latter having already advanced money on these lots.

The land conveyed comprises three lots in the "Horse Pasture," so called, a sixth part in land near Hodgkins Cove, costing originally $3000, and undivided land at that cove for which Colonel French paid $12,000 originally. The aggregate value of the lots is $15,550 and there is a mortgage of $2000 upon them given in 1869. The consideration named in each of the new deeds is $1.

Death of a Former Resident.

The PRESS has been requested to notice the death of William H. Garniss formerly of this town, which occurred at the home of his father in Norwich, Ct., on September 12 last. The deceased was well known in Peabody where he resided for about twelve years. The first year of his residence here was passed in the brick house on Foster street, now known as Baldwin's hotel. He was a young man of thirty years, possessed of many good traits and gifted with a talent for music which will be recalled by many members of the different lodges in town, which he was wont to entertain, the piano being his favorite instrument. He left town some months ago, in hopes of restoring his health, which had been shattered by consumption but although the change temporarily helped him, he rapidly declined and passed away only a few weeks before his near friend, Charles R. Hodgkins of this town, succumbed to the same fatal disease. The two young men were closely bound together by the ties of friendship, their taste and talents being much alike. Mr. Hodgkins never knew of his friend's death and Mr. Garniss' brother came to Peabody only the other day for the purpose of informing him but great was his surprise and sorrow to learn that he also had died.

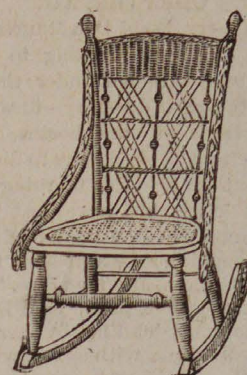

How Queen Victoria Travels.

Many times I have seen items in American papers which said, that the Queen of England traveled very plainly; that her private carriage was no better than any other first-class English carriage. I wish right here to say that these reports are not based on authentic evidence. An official of the Midland Road took me into the Queen's carriage as it stood in St. Pancras station, and I must say it is as fine as any Pullman car ever built—and that is saying a good deal. The walls of the saloon are of satinwood highly polished. The cushions are of white silk embroidered in gold thread. A garter containing her motto, "Honi soit qui y pense," surrounds her initials, V. R. Her large chair—and it takes a large one, too—is at the back of the carriage and faces the engine. At her hand is a silver plate in which are electric annunciators, pressing which she can call her different attendants who occupy another compartment. Three other easy chairs are in her compartment, besides a satin-wood table about six feet long and three feet wide, upon which were piled the latest English, French, German and American periodicals. The carpet is of velvet, and in a good state of preservation considering it has been in use over fifteen years. The curtains at the windows and a portiere are hung on silver poles. The door-handles are solid silver and the whole saloon has the appearance of solid luxury. Victoria, herself, selected the furnishings, which are said to pattern after the white drawing-room at Windsor Castle. The whole saloon with fittings cost between $30,000 and $35,000. The carriage is about half the length of an ordinary American railroad car. At first sight the carriage impressed me as being gaudy, but this idea wore away in a moment.

The railway official informed me that the Queen paid about $1.90 per mile for traveling, besides first-class fares for every one in her party. As the official from whom I received my information was in a position to know, this explodes other reports that the Queen and her suit always travel free. Frank Leslie's Weekly.

In make up: Most baking powders contain ammonia or alum. Cleveland's does not; not a particle.

It is made of pure cream of tartar and bi-carbonate of soda, with a little flour to keep the strength, nothing else. Cleveland's is wholesome.

In strength: A rounded spoonful of Cleveland's does better work than a heaping spoonful of any other.

A large saving on a year's bakings. Cleveland's leavens most.

In results: Cake made with Cleveland's is fine grained, keeps moist and fresh.

CHAPTER XII.

"I am sorry," said Don Maurizio, coming out the next morning to find the usual group gathered under the arcade around the great doorway—to wit, Dona Zarifa, Derwent, the horses and the mozos—"that I shall have to disappoint you about our ride this morning. I find by a letter which I have just received that I must go on business to Eitzatlan, and it would not be agreeable to either of you to accompany me there."

"Of course not, papa," said Dona Zarifa, who was standing by her horse's head, feeding him with sugar, which the beautiful, intelligent creature took daintily from her hand. "And it is really as well—at least, so far as I am concerned—that the ride is deferred," she went on. "When I went to the hospital this morning I found Poor Benita wandering in mind, and my presence seemed to soothe her. So I will go back at once. Adios, my beauty!"—she patted the horse's arching neck—"are you sorry that you will not have to carry me this morning?"

"I am sure that he is, if I may be allowed to interpret his sentiments by my own," said Derwent. "And you are going to the hospital, senorita? I can say nothing against such a charitable intention; but before you spoke—so quick is thought—I was about to propose a visit to the Canada. Ever since you said that you would like a picture of it, I have been anxious to try what my efforts can accomplish in the way of a sketch."

"But I thought you disclaimed any artistic skill?" she said, with some surprise.

"I said that I was not an artist. That is true. But I have a little facility in sketching from nature, though not much training. I cannot promise you a finished picture, but I may make a passable drawing of the ravine."

"I shall be delighted," she said. "I hope that you will try. And surely my absence cannot matter. You do not need assistance in your drawing?"

"Oh, yes," said Derwent, though he had the grace to blush. "I need your assistance to determine the best point of view—that is, the one you would prefer. But I will take my materials and follow my own judgment. Then, when you have finished your charitable ministrations, you will perhaps come and tell me if you like my choice."

"Yes, I will come," she said, smiling. And then, without waiting to change her dress, she walked away toward the village on the other side of the gardens.

Derwent stood and watched her as long as she was in sight. The close fitting habit showed every line of her statuesque figure and the perfect grace with which she moved, as she passed down one of the shady avenues, her favorite companion, a beautiful greyhound, walking beside her and looking as thoroughbred as herself. All around stretched the grounds, dappled with sunshine and shadow, while the long vista of the tree arched avenue held only the one moving figure, as a perfect picture, in the heart of the green loveliness. Derwent gave a deep sigh. "If I could only paint that!" he said half aloud, and then turned, with some confusion, to find Padre Francisco beside him.

"What is that you would like to paint?" asked the priest. "This view of the gardens? Yes, it is very charming. But is not that Dona Zarifa that I see walking away, yonder? How is it that your usual ride is not to be taken?"

Derwent explained, adding, "So Dona Zarifa has gone to the hospital to see some poor woman who is wandering in her mind."

"Benita. Yes; she will die, I fear."

"And I am going to try and sketch the Canada. Will you come, padre mio, and see my failure?"

"I will come for a little while and see your success," the padre answered, "for I do not think that you are likely to attempt anything in which you would fail."

"I should not wish to attempt what I knew to be beyond my powers, certainly. But a man cannot always tell beforehand whether he will succeed in an effort, even when he thinks he may."

"If he has gauged his powers correctly he can generally tell, at least, in some degree. You, Senor Derwent, know pretty accurately, I think, what you can do."

"I wish I did!" said Derwent devoutly. "But I am, like other men, misled by vanity. I sometimes essay tasks beyond my strength and fail. I shall probably fail in making this sketch, but I mean to try. Fortunately I have sketching materials with me, for I thought I would do something of the kind in Mexico. This will be my first attempt."

A few minutes later, with a portfolio under his arm and accompanied by the padre, he was on his way to the ravine, where he had spent many delightful hours since the day when he was first introduced to it. They tried various points of view, and it was finally decided that the sketch should be made from the pavilion. So Derwent settled himself, with the more satisfaction because he had a support on the railing for his book and a roof overhead to keep away the intrusive rays of the sun. Padre Francisco lingered, talking pleasantly, until he was finally at work; and then, saying that his own work awaited him, he took his departure, with many wishes for the success of the picture.

As his slender, casknecked figure went down the glen Derwent watched it with a smile, saying to himself that if his picture was a success that figure should enter into it. "Dona Zarifa will like that," he thought, for he knew how dear the gentle priest was to every one at Miraflores. He had heard from Don Maurizio that he belonged to one of the proscribed religious orders, which, robbed, exiled and defrauded by the government, are yet quietly doing the work of God in poverty and obscurity all over Mexico.

The young man was thinking of that figure, and of all the long line of such figures which had Christianized and civilized a savage people, as he worked with a facility that surprised himself. Perhaps the stimulus was the desire to gratify Dona Zarifa—for love can do wonderful things and develop powers almost undreamed of—or perhaps he was growing in the most satisfactory manner, and he was so absorbed in its progress that he had almost forgotten to wonder if Dona Zarifa would appear according to her promise, when suddenly, in such quick succession as to be almost simultaneous, two shots rang sharply on the air, the last—a rifle ball—just grazing his ear and then flattening itself on the stone column beside which he sat.

The book dropped from his hand and the sheet of paper on which he was sketching was borne by a current of air over the railing and fluttered unheeded into the current below, as with a violent start he looked up to see Dona Zarifa standing on the path below, with a still smoking pistol in her uplifted hand.

In an instant he was by her side, for instinct told him that the shot had not been fired idly. "For God's sake, what is it?" he cried, gazing with astonishment at the pale, set face, the shining eyes and the uplifted hand pointing so steadily without a tremor in the direction of the pavilion.

"There is a man, an assassin, behind yonder rock," she answered, in a clear, vibrant tone, pointing to a low, long boulder that crowned the hill which rose immediately in the rear of the pavilion. "I saw him about to shoot you, and I fired just as he had his finger on the trigger. His aim swerved and he fell. I think I killed him."

"I will see," said Derwent, turning quickly; but she stopped him by a motion and extended the pistol. "He may be merely wounded," she said. "Be cautious."

With no recollection of his weakness he sprang forward and hastened up the steep ascent. Eighteen or twenty yards brought him to the boulder, and there on the ground behind it was the assassin, his rifle where it had fallen beside him. At the first glance Derwent thought he was dead, but on examination discovered that, though insensible, he was still breathing. Throwing open his loose white upper garment, the young man saw that the pistol ball had entered his chest some little distance below the heart. A stream of dark blood was flowing from it, and Derwent's first act was to place his thumb on the bullet-hole. The next moment he heard a step, and turning his head saw Zarifa standing beside him, looking down at the man's face with an expression of intense pain. But she asked in a hushed tone:

"Is he dead?"

"No; and I am not sure that the wound need be fatal if we can get speedy help. Can you go for it?"

"Yes, certainly," she answered, starting away impetuously. But before she had gone three steps she turned again, and picking up the man's weapon carried it a short distance away. "Have you the pistol in your hand?" she said. "Be on your guard; some of these people are very treacherous. I will soon bring assistance and Padre Francisco. I left him at the hospital."

When she was gone, Derwent for the first time looked closely at the man's face. It was dark, with finely cut features and a tangled mass of black hair; but not even the closed eyes and relaxed muscles could soften its fierce and sinister expression. A desperado in appearance as well as in deed, he looked thoroughly capable of the dastardly act in which vengeance had overtaken him, and Derwent felt with a sense of shuddering horror, such as he had never before even imagined, that but for the strangely fortunate chance—or was it the mercy of heaven?—that had brought Dona Zarifa upon the scene at the critical moment, he himself would now be lying with his life blood welling out and his eyes closed forever to the things of earth.

The man must be indeed insensible who, having as it were, felt the very breath of death upon his cheek, is not thrilled by the touch of that great and terrible mystery. Nor was the thrill lessened by thinking of the hand that saved him, the gentlewoman's hand that had never before taken even the life of a bird, but that had not faltered in striking the murderer down. What a fire of fierce indignation had been in the dark eyes when he met them first! It was like the deadly flash of a sword from its sheath. He found himself recalling it with such a sense of conflicting emotion that it was well for him that the sound of quickly approaching steps tore his mind from the subject. Padre Francisco had been met by Dona Zarifa before she had gone far, and he hurried on at once to join Derwent, while she proceeded quickly to the hospital and, in less time than they dared hope, several men bearing a litter made their appearance.

With the practiced skill of one accustomed to such work, the padre bandaged the wound, and the man was placed on the litter just as Zarifa once more appeared.

"The doctor will be at the hospital by the time you get there," she said. "Do you think, padre mio, that?"

"He will live?" the priest said, concluding her faltering sentence. "I cannot tell. He is still insensible, but I believe he will recover consciousness soon, and I shall stay beside him. Go home now, my child. This has been a great shock to you. Go."

But Dona Zarifa shook her head, and Derwent saw by her pallor and the expression of her face how much she was suffering. "I will go to the hospital," she said. "I can render assistance there."

"None," said the padre gently, but firmly. "You must go to the casa. If Don Maurizio has returned send him to us, but you can do nothing. Take Senor Derwent with you."

"No," said Derwent, "my place is certainly here to help you with your burden. But Dona Zarifa must go. It is too painful a sight for her."

"Nothing is too painful when one can do anything to help," she said. "But if there is nothing—"

She cast one more glance at the man on the litter, shuddered and turned away. Derwent followed her with his eyes and with his heart, but an intuition told him that it was best to leave her alone, even if there had not been work for him to do. It was slow and difficult work conveying the wounded man to the hospital, where Our Lady of Guadalupe stood above the doorway, as if to welcome all who came, and where he was laid down on a white bed—the most wild, gaunt, bloody object that had ever come within those quiet walls.

CHAPTER XIII.

Excitation is the only word which will at all describe Don Maurizio's sentiments when he heard of that morning's work. He could scarcely think of Derwent's narrow escape, or of the terrible necessity laid upon Dona Zarifa, in his gratification at having the would be assassin in his own hands.

"Now we shall know all!" he said; "now the mystery will be cleared up! Nothing better could have happened—if only the scoundrel can be kept alive until he confesses."

"I am afraid," said Derwent, "that will be difficult. He looks to me as if he were sinking fast."

They had just left the hospital, where the subject of their conversation was lying in a state of apparent insensibility, with the doctor on one side of his bed and Padre Francisco on the other.

"I do not think he is so near death as you imagine," Don Maurizio answered. "These Indians have wonderful powers of vitality. He will rally sufficiently to speak, and that is all we want. I have told the doctor to spare no effort to keep him alive and give him strength to do this. Our best hope, however, is from the influence of Padre Francisco. He will bring him to contrition and confession."

"Do you believe it possible?"

"Yes; I have seen it too often not to believe it possible. Men like this are different from your criminals, inasmuch as they are not able to rid themselves of the saving principle of faith. Like the devils, they believe and tremble. The justice of God is a very real thing to them—the comfortable delusion that there is no such justice not having yet reached them; and when death comes, their overmastering desire is to make their peace with God as far as possible."

"I hope, for Dona Zarifa's sake, that this man may not die," said Derwent, after a short pause. "Does the doctor think there is any hope for him?"

"Not the least. The bullet is in his lung. It was a good shot—no man could have made a better. Why should she regret it? If she had not shot him you would be dead; and there cannot be two lives. And it will save him trouble if he dies now—after having spoken—for if he were to recover it would only be to be marched out and shot as a highway robber. Such crimes are dealt with summarily here."

Derwent could not but smile. "In that case it will be better for him to die comfortably in your hospital, with Padre Francisco's gentle ministrations," he said. "But I am grieved beyond measure that Dona Zarifa should have been forced to an act so painful to herself in order to save my life. It almost makes me regret that I ever came to Miraflores."

"Nonsense!" said Don Maurizio, good-naturedly. "If she feels any pain on the subject—which I cannot believe—it shows a morbid spirit that I would not have suspected in her. I am proud, myself, that she rose to the occasion so well. She should be grateful to have had the opportunity not only to save your life, but also to clear Senor Barrera of a very dark suspicion; as I am sure this man's confession will clear him."

"I hope it will," said Derwent; "but to take human life—that is hard even for a man!"

"To take human life—the life of a cowardly assassin—when it is to save the life of an unconscious man at whose back he has leveled his gun!" cried Don Maurizio with impatience, not unmixed with scorn. "I should feel no more regret for that necessity than for shooting a tiger in a jungle. Neither would you. Neither, I am certain, does Zarifa. The marvelously fortunate thing is that she came upon the ground just at that moment when her presence was needed."

"Yes," said Derwent; "if she had been a minute later I should not be walking here with you now."

He looked around, as if with a sudden sense of how near the peril had been, and how narrow the chance that he would ever look again upon the beauty of earth. Never had that beauty seemed to touch him more keenly than in connection with this thought. The long shadows of late afternoon were now stretching across the grounds through which he had watched Dona Zarifa walking in the morning, unconscious, as most of us are when the dark wing of Azrael most nearly overshadows us, that he might be looking his last upon that gracious form: the wide plain stretched into magical blueness afar to meet the luminous sky, the distant purple heights had a more mystic charm than ever in his eyes, and the fresh, delicious air seemed fraught with blessing. He had a feeling as if a new life were given to him—a life divided from that of yesterday by the gulf of a great danger, and a life which was the gift (after God) of Zarifa. "It is owing to her that I am here!" he thought, after a rush of emotion, a sense that existence had become something dearer and more precious for that fact. "She will tell me that she would have done the same for any one, and I know that she would have done it for the poorest peon in Mexico. No matter. It was for me that she did it. Nothing can alter that."

HAVE YOU guessed who is to be Speaker of the next House?

THE DAILY papers next week will be filed with accounts of the Graves-Barnaby murder trial.

SENATOR BRICE will probably be unseated for want of residence and Gen. Foraker is likely to succeed him.

MURDERER ALMY bears his sentence of death with much more self possession than was generally expected. He showed some emotion when informed of the judgment—but who would not?

THE FIRE bug seems to be on the rampage this fall, in various parts of Essex County. Haverhill was added to the list of victim towns recently. Four incendiary fires occurred there Thanksgiving morning.

Extra vigilance is necessary to apprehend one or two of the miscreants as an example for the rest.

THE CONCORD, (N. H.) Monitor has discovered a roarer's nest, and is making a great prating about the illegality of murderer Almy's death sentence, in as much as it was not pronounced in presence of the prisoner.

It is fair to assume that the Court will not allow justice to be defeated by such a trifling technicality if the proceeding is conceded to be irregular.

NOTHING CAN now prevent the nomination of James G. Blaine, at the convention next June, except the positive refusal by himself to allow his name used; say those who claim to know.

The sentiment of Republicans has experienced a radical change since Mr. Blaine assumed the direction of the State Department. His reciprocity views have captivated a great many who were numbered on the Mugwump lists seven years ago.

PRESIDENT FONSECA of Brazil, has abdicated in response to popular decree, and President Peixotto is now counteracting the acts of usurpation of his predecessor with as much vigor and despatch as possible. He has summoned a convention of congress to be opened December 18 and ordered it to proceed with its regular functions.

Peixotto does not manifest marked distaste for the legislation which furnished Fonseca the pretext for assuming dictatorship, as it will be pushed to completion, and the constitutional amendments ordered by the usurper abandoned.

Quiet has been completely restored.

THE LAST issue of the Marblehead Messenger contains a short criticism upon the practice of Salem tradesmen of perpetuating recollections of the unhappy Witchcraft delusion, that contains some plain common sense.

In a territory so rich in pleasanter and more ennobling historic events it does seem as if a more tasteful subject might be selected for emphasis.

THE FREQUENT appeals to the Courts for protection from the frauds of short term endowment orders indicates that the legislature was headed in the right direction last winter when the general onslaught was made against "bond companies." We think, however, the assault was too sweeping, and should have been confined to short term orders.

The principle upon which the short term orders proceed reminds one of the man who thought if a phial of medicine taken in small doses would cure him in time, by swallowing the whole contents, he would be restored to health at once.

THE WIDENING of Railroad avenue at the eastern terminus is a long needed improvement but judging from present appearances it will be much longer before the town takes that important step. Little or no public interest is manifested in the proposed change and yet there is not a citizen of the town, familiar with the situation, but will agree it should be done.

When the public is to be benefited so much, it is singular that such indifference should prevail.

Let the citizens who will be most benefited appear before the Selectmen and show an interest in the matter and no doubt the job will be done and everybody will be satisfied. Otherwise the whole matter may go by default.

THE NATIONAL committee decided this week, to hold the presidential convention at Minneapolis on June 7. Pittsburg was represented by a delegation charged with the duty of securing the honor for that city, but so overwhelming was the drift toward the west, her champions were upon the point of retiring without a struggle. Other cities put in their bids for the honors, but to no purpose.

The convention considered but two names for the Presidency—Harrison and Blaine. Blaine appeared to be the real candidate however, and his name was a signal for applause whenever spoken.

Some of the nearest friends of President Harrison, were chagrined at the coolness with which he received the National Committee when they called upon him at the White House. One of his adherents remarked: "He missed his opportunity. If he had made one of his popular impromptu speeches he might have captured the committee." Secretary Blaine was diametrically opposite in his reception and the effect was naturally prejudicial to the President.

When one considers that the President had been cognizant of the previous action of the Committee, of cheering the name of Blaine while his own hardly attracted passing notice, it is not strange that human nature asserted herself and forbade him to play hypocrite, although he may have well known that card was trumps.

Two New Books.

The "Faith Doctor" by Edward Eggleston is a book of remarkable cleverness. The entire story as well as the people of the story centres around New York city. The successful endeavor of a young fellow to work himself into the most select society, and pass as the exponent of good form even among the 400, is drawn with rare and delicate skill. It is in some respects a good example of the wonderful adaptability of the average American. A young man from a country town with some money, a good figure, quiet and observant, with an instinctive sense of the proprieties comes to the metropolis, arranges his affairs, discards the clothes made by the country tailor, keeps his eyes and ears open, is respectful, abstemious and ambitious, and not only acquires fortune and financial standing, but what is dearer than all—position and influence amongst the oldest and most exclusive families. To those who have read and laughed at Mr. Eggleston's "Hosier Schoolmaster," the transition in style and finish and power from that book to the "Faith Doctor" will not seem more marked than that of the good looking young countryman to the correct and faultless man of fashion. How finely is the picture of the female exhorter drawn; with her expansive presence, her rich voice and her expressive eyes, and the luxurious fervor which exalts her soul, as she glowingly descants on the sins and omissions of the tearful and wealthy penitents who crowd the sumptuous parlors to be moved by her eloquence. It is a finished portrait of this comfortable missionary intoxicated by the fumes and fervor of her own passionate periods, but who is appalled when confronted with the effects produced on a simple and sincere soul who takes her pleadings in deadly earnest. The line between this pretentious apostle and the spiritually minded young devotee is as well defined and as clearly drawn as that which separates the fine scholarly instinctive gentlemen from the well mannered, well clothed correct hero who is a gentleman because in fact it is gentlemanly to be such. The rivalry and the struggle for supremacy in the banking institution is a nice descriptive bit, and the gradations and yearnings of fashionable society are drawn with delicacy and skill. As a picture of certain phases of life in the American metropolis, the book is a decided success and will repay perusal.

"On the border with" is one of the latest additions to the library. It is written by Captain John C. Bourke, and is a story stirring and varied, embracing a most graphic and comprehensive description of the Indian question from the standpoint of an actor. The peddling policy and vacillation in the treatment of the nation's wards, and the perfidy and bad faith so often exhibited by those in power towards the Indian, is portrayed with a vigor and fearlessness worthy of commendation. The author has a profound admiration for Gen. Crook. He is never tired of extolling those qualities of courage, patience, reticence, resolution, which united with sagacity and stern justice, made the name of Crook honored amongst the officers and soldiers, and feared and respected by the fiercest Indian tribes. Few persons can form a just idea of the extreme danger and delicacy of the various missions entrusted to this soldier, and fewer still could have accomplished the tasks with such consummate wisdom and effectiveness.

The campaign embraces the most arduous services from the burning plains of Arizona to the stern and pitiless defiles of North Dakota, from the borders of Mexico, subduing the hitherto untamable Apaches to the snowy peaks of Montana. The master stroke of Crook's policy was the surrender of "Crazy Horse" and his band. It is perhaps safe to affirm that more than one of the new states which are now blessed with stable government, and who are now represented in the national councils, would be yet in a state of territorial turmoil, if the settlement of the Indian question in these localities had been entrusted to one less wise, less just and less firm than Crook. He had a thorough knowledge of the Indian character, and a profound belief in their native integrity and adherence to well understood principles. He employed the hostiles as scouts and skirmishers, and was firmly convinced of the advantage of using the Indians as soldiers. The success of this policy really settled the fate of the great warlike tribes, for when the bands of fierce Cheyennes, and Arapahoes and Sioux found well trained and loyal troops of their people fighting under the guidance and the banner of the white men they made overtures of surrender, were peacefully disarmed, and were quietly though sullenly escorted to their reservation. The rascality of the contractor, and the meanness of the Indian agent were frightful obstacles to the peaceful and equitable adjustment of the Indian difficulty, and naturally these people were not slow in devising methods, and circulating slanders against a policy which would deprive them of their vocation, but happily the rascals were circumvented. Any person who thinks that the soldiers on the plains have an easy time, will have a different idea after reading of the terrible marches in blinding snow storms, and the hurried advance across arid plains, often with the scantiest rations, and always surrounded by a hidden and implacable foe. The book is not altogether pleasant reading, for the record of fights, and surprises, and scalplings, and massacres is sometimes appalling.

ESSEX COUNTY.

William Weeks of Beverly attempted suicide a week ago, by jumping into the water from Beverly bridge. He landed in quagmire where he sank helpless and was rescued by two young men who chanced to see him go over.

The water in the Merrimac river has risen several feet at Lawrence and Saturday quite a stream was falling steadily over the dam, a sight which has been missed of late. This is due to the slight fall of rain last week.

An Indian tea-talk is to be given on Wednesday December 9. The Rev. W. W. Locke of Boston will tell of his experiences among the Crow Indians of Montana. Afternoon tea will be served from the "Wigwam" by young ladies in costume. Tickets can be had at Daniel Low's store at 25 cents each. Entertainment from 4 to 6, Wednesday December 9, at Barton Square vestry Salem.

On Wednesday morning the case of Samuel M. Foye, charged with having mutilated lobsters in his possession illegally—to wit; 18 lobster's tails came up at Salem and was continued until Monday. Mr. Foye pleaded not guilty.

The Emerson Club of Salem pleasantly entertained the Sawyer Club of Danvers in the Universalist Chapel on Tuesday evening. There were tableaux and music, with a good supper.

On Wednesday evening, David Barry, of Beverly, endeavored to make off with a turkey from Mr. Jonathan Osborn's store on Essex street Salem, but was caught in the act and arrested by Officer Abercrombie.

The Steamer Watertown has abandoned its trips to Salem and will hereafter run only between Boston and Lynn. The boat has not been well patronized at the former port.

The dredging of South river Salem, has revealed a ledge near Derby wharf. The rock is only 5 feet 6 inches below water at low tide, and will be removed before long. It lies 300 feet south of Derby Wharf light.

Wenham and some parts of Beverly are experiencing the pangs of poverty just at present, by reason of the water famine. Wells in that vicinity are generally dry and aqua pura sells for fifteen cents a barrel, two for a quarter.

On Monday motor man Gorman, of an electric car on the Marblehead division of the Naumkeag street railway, received a very considerable shock apparently through the brake handle of his car, as the latter was passing up over Forest River hill, the electricity passing through his hand as it held the handle.

Albert Grossman, the inoffensive Frankfurt sausage man at the Eastern depot at Salem, who has been several times the victim of cowardly roughs, was outrageously assaulted on Saturday night by a brutal Loodlum, who broke the bone of Grossman's nose with some hard substance, possibly a stone. Dr. Pierson has since been obliged to remove a bit of the bone, and the nose itself was found to be very badly lacerated.

A fire was discovered in the basement of Stanley's drug store Wednesday night which would have proved disastrous in a short time had it been undiscovered. Beverly will have to bestir herself and capture the fire bug. Four fires within a week, and all incendiary, is a bad record.

Next Thursday afternoon and evening a session of the Essex County District Lodge of Good Templars will be held with Aggressive Lodge of Beverly in Burnham's Hall on Cabot street, opposite Railroad Avenue. The afternoon session will be called to order at 2:30 o'clock. The Boston & Maine railroad has agreed to reduce fare to 2 cents per mile where the round trip ticket exceeds 25 cents.

Fire was discovered yesterday morning in Gray's carpenter shop Beverly. The local department but led with the flames as soon as possible but the building was demolished.

District Deputy Grand Master W. D. T. Trefry publicly installed W. M. C. W. Richardson and the other officers of Essex Lodge of Masons, on Tuesday evening. The interior of Masonic Hall was very attractively decorated with palms, ferns and chrysanthemums. The ladies were present in force. The installation ceremony was in accordance with the impressive rites of masonry, and was followed by supper served by McCrillis & Co. and dancing to the music of the Cadet Orchestra.

Resolutions Of Respect.

WHEREAS, The dread messenger of death has again entered our association and taken from our ranks, an estimable member, one who had the best interests of our association at heart,

Resolved, That in the death of Robert G. Buxton, his family have lost a kind and devoted husband and father, this association a worthy comrade, and the community in which he has lived an honest man.

Resolved, That we extend to the afflicted family our heartfelt sympathy in their sad bereavement.

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and these resolutions be spread upon the records of this association, that a copy be sent to his family, also published in the Peabody Press.

Catarrh

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed.

Stuffed-Up Feeling.
"I will say I have been troubled for several years with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best result. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother, who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble." Mrs. S. D. HEATH, Putnam, Conn.

LOCAL LINES.

On account of ill health, Miss Mary J. Floyd has tendered her resignation to the South Church of the office she has held for ten years and a half, that of church missionary. It was voted by the parish however, not to accept the resignation and the pastor was requested to tender to her the appreciation of her service by the parish.

The police raided the kitchen bar rooms of Margret Lewis and Mary McCarthy on Union street and Elizabeth McCarthy on Hancock street last Sunday. They also seized some whiskey from Mrs. Lewis.

The annual harvest concert was held in South Church last Sunday evening.

A Thanksgiving service was held at the Universalist church last Sunday, after the regular morning devotions. Henry B. Wilson has been subpoenaed to serve upon the jury panel of the Superior Court at Salem beginning the first Monday of December.

A dissolution of co-partnership in one of the well known firms is expected soon.

Some new developments may be expected in street railway circles soon of a revolutionary character.

The temperance rally held in Town Hall last Sunday evening under the auspices of the F. M. C. T. A. Society was a grand success, although some of the speakers advertised to address the meeting were unavoidably prevented from fulfilling their engagements. It is proposed to hold another sometime in January.

Frank Wingate and Fred Knapp of Bates' College, Auburn, Maine, are spending their vacation at home in town.

Last Saturday afternoon, Mr. James C. Linehan received a letter from the proprietor of the American stables on Sudbury street, Boston, informing him that the team hired by Leary on the 13th inst., was put up at his stables upon the night of the day it was hired, but as it contained no more definite information the advice was taken in the light, merely, of a clue, and nothing was done about it until Sunday morning, when a telephone message was received from the Boston police saying the team was still at the American stables and would be held for orders.

Mr. Linehan then started for Boston and recovered his property. There was a good sized board bill, however, that had to be settled before the property was turned over. Mr. Linehan's name was on the whip and thus identified the property.

The list of signatures to the petition in favor of Thomas H. Jackman still increases, but it is said a caucus will have to be called to finally determine the contest.

There will be a lecture at the Methodist church tomorrow evening at 7.30 o'clock, under the auspices of the Y. W. C. T. U. The speakers will be Mrs. L. M. Chase, of Mo. who was a delegate from that state to the National Convention in Boston. The subject will be—"The Duties of Citizenship." Mrs. Chase has been president of the W. C. T. U. in the state of Arkansas for the past seven years. The lecture will be free to all. A collection will be taken to defray the expense of speakers.

The alarm for the fire at Hotel Queen, Beverly, was heard in town Tuesday morning.

The G-Clef chorus held a rehearsal on Tuesday evening.

Tickets for the Old Ladies' Home fair which opens Tuesday are selling quite freely. The programme is as follows: Tuesday evening, concert by the Cadet Band; Wednesday evening, supper; Thursday evening, grand social dance, to music of the Cadet Orchestra. The fair will be open every afternoon for the sale of wares, both useful and ornamental.

The next lecture in the Peabody free course Thursday evening, December 10, will be given by Rev. R. S. McArthur, subject—"The Empire of the Czar." There will be no lecture next week.

N. W. Edson & Co. delivered fifteen turkeys and other Thanksgiving Fixings Wednesday morning, marked "Furnished by the selectmen of Peabody from the income of the Eliza Sutton fund."

The new Veteran Firemen's association held an adjourned meeting Tuesday evening, and completed their organization. P. L. Winchester was elected treasurer and a board of five directors chosen. It was voted to adopt the name of Union Veteran Firemen's association of Peabody, and committees were appointed on procuring an engine and meeting place.

The Y. W. C. T. U. will conduct the service at the Almshouse tomorrow. A barge will leave the square at 2.15.

The excitement at West Peabody Thanksgiving Day was a greased pig race and a pigeon shoot at the Red farm, at 10 o'clock in the morning.

The skating rink was open Thanksgiving afternoon and evening for skating only. A good sized party was on the floor.

Union services were held at South church at 10.30 Thanksgiving forenoon. Rev. W. P. Reynolds of the Baptist church delivered the sermon.

Margaret Lewis of Union street pleaded guilty, in the police court this week to the charge of a liquor nuisance and the court continued the case indefinitely for sentence. Mrs. Lewis is in a very poor circumstances, and has three children dependent upon her.

Richard Ruggles was unable to secure bonds and was taken to Salem jail by Officer Shaw.

At a meeting of the high school football club it was voted that the ball should stay in the building during vacation. In opposition to this, part of the scholars bought a new ball and a game was played with it on Square field, Thanksgiving morning at 9 o'clock, between two picked teams.

Wm. H. Brown, M. S. Clark and the Franklin Osborn leather company distributed turkeys among their employees Wednesday.

The Canadian Glee Club, held a social dance in Temperance Hall, Thanksgiving eve and a very enjoyable evening was passed.

The tax collector will issue his notice to delinquents immediately, and it behooves all who have not cashed up to go and do so without further delay.

David Staples of Danvers fell off his wagon near the pump at the head of Central street yesterday. When assistance came he was found to be dead. It was probably epilepsy.

One of the unoccupied buildings connected with the Harris tannery was fired Thanksgiving evening by an incendiary. The flames were discovered and soon extinguished. The building is in fit condition for demolition, but not that way.

A meeting of the board of manager of Sutton Home and the supper committee will be held at 4 P. M. today.

A gospel praise service with choral singing will be held in South church vestry at 7 o'clock tomorrow evening. All are welcome.

B. F. Southwick inspected E. W. Hincks Post, G. A. R., last evening, at Saugus. A car load of G. A. R. boys from the local post went with him in a special car of the Essex Electric company.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed condition you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free, F. J. CHENEY, & CO., Toledo, O. Sold by druggists, 75 cts.

Dean's Rheumatic Pills positively cure Rheumatism and Neuralgia. Entirely vegetable. Safe.

The question of who shall be the next postmaster, still continues to agitate the public, and both parties are working to the utmost. The petitions in favor of Postmaster Jackman are being rapidly signed and fully one half of the Republicans in town have expressed themselves in favor of the present incumbent either by signing some of the various petitions or by personal letters to Gen. Cogswell.

Mr. Jackman's petitions will be forwarded to Washington early in the coming week, and all who have not as yet signed can find copies at the stores of George Stevens, H. M. Osborn and N. E. Reed.

In all probability a caucus of Republican voters will be called in the course of the next week or ten days in order that a full and free expression of the opinions of the members of the party may be had. Every Republican in town should turn out and by his vote show the administration at Washington that the Republican party of Peabody is in favor of Civil Service Reform and that they are perfectly well satisfied with the Post Office as it now is.

Edward A. Kimball, a resident of Andover street, died suddenly yesterday morning from the effects of hide poisoning. He had been confined to the house but a few days, and his case was not considered critical until just before he expired.

Robert G. Buxton, the well known butcher, residing on North Central street, died Thanksgiving morning at his home, of paralysis. Deceased was 69 years of age. He leaves a widow and several children.

The public winter meeting of the state board of agriculture will be held at Horticultural hall, Boston, Dec. 1, 2 and 3. Addresses will be given by Mayor Mathews, Governor Russell, Hon. J. S. Grinnell, J. B. Olcott, Prof. Baily, and other authorities on matters that interest farmers. The topics will include, sheep husbandry, breeding swine, the situation of farmers, country roads, and other subjects. The meeting will be open to all.

DANA'S SARSAPARILLA is guaranteed to absolutely cure disease, and it does it too.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Essex ss. PROBATE COURT.

To Daniel Goodwin, of Peabody, in said County.

WHEREAS, complaint has been made to said Court, by the Selectmen of the town of Peabody, in said County, and Sarah A. Spaulding of said Peabody, that in their judgment, you do, by drinking, gaming, idleness, so spend, waste, and lessen your estate, as to expose yourself and family to want or suffering; and do thereby expose said town of Peabody to charge or expense for your and their support; and praying that Willard Spaulding of said Peabody, or some other suitable person may be appointed your Guardian, agreeably to the law in such case made and provided.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be held at Salem, in and for said county of Essex, on the first Monday of December next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why a Guardian should not be appointed as aforesaid.

And said Selectmen are hereby directed to cause said Daniel Goodwin to be notified of the time and place appointed for the hearing of said complaint, by serving him with a copy of this order, fourteen days at least, before said Court, if he can be found within said Commonwealth; and if he cannot be so found, by publishing this citation in the Peabody Press, a newspaper printed at Peabody, once a week for three weeks, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, Rollin E. Harmon, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this sixth day of November, in the year eighteen hundred and ninety-one.

Mortgagee's Sale.

By virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed, given by Bridget Ray to John W. Porter dated the twentieth day of February, A. D. 1883, and recorded with Essex Deeds, Southern District, Book 1,02, Leaf 151, and assigned to John C. Campbell, November 17th, 1891, and for breach of condition of said mortgage deed, will be sold at public auction, on the first parcel of land hereinafter described, on the twenty-first day of December, A. D. 1891, at two o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises described in said deed, to wit:—

A certain parcel of land situated in Peabody, Massachusetts, bounded as follows: viz., beginning at the corner of land, lately conveyed by Martha S. Putnam to the Town of Peabody and the land which runs westerly from Andover street, near Fulton's corner; thence running south easterly by said land of the Town of Peabody, two hundred and fifty-eight (258) feet, to a cherry tree by and now or formerly of heirs of M. Wilson; thence by said Wilson's land, land or late of Stephen N. Proctor and land now or late of Moses Preston in different courses, to said lane, thence north easterly by said lane to the point began at, containing about two and one half acres.

Also another parcel of land in said Peabody bounded as follows viz: beginning at a point on Prospect street one hundred and twenty feet distant, south westerly as the wall stands from the burying ground; thence running by said street and wall, northwesterly to the burying ground; thence northwesterly by the wall as they stand by said burying ground, by land now or formerly of Felton, and land now or formerly of Elijah Wilson, six hundred and forty-two feet and eleven inches to land now or formerly of heirs of M. Wilson; thence south westerly by land of said heirs one hundred and forty-one feet by the wall as it now stands; thence south easterly in a direct line by land formerly of Richard S. Rogers, five hundred and eighty-two feet and two inches to the point began at, containing about one acre, three rods and thirty-eight and one half rods. Said premises are sold subject to the agreement between John Ray and Daniel Kilomons recorded with Essex County Deeds, Southern District, Book 507, Leaf 133, and to a mortgage to Martha I. Putnam, the consideration of which is One Thousand and Fifty Dollars.

Two Heads for a Wife.

H. C. Matheson is an English engineer who has been in the employ of the Chinese government for four years. "Some months ago," said he, "there was a great deal of trouble between the natives of Formosa and the Chinese. The former are savage fellows and object to the encroachments of the latter. There was,
and is yet for that matter, an unwritten law among the natives of Formosa which forbids any young man to marry until he has cut off two Chinese heads, and a little anxiety to plunge into matrimony causes a reduction in the Chinese population. This was one cause of the trouble."—San Francisco Call.

The First Home of the Flag.

The little old building on Arch street, above Second, where Betsey Ross made the first flag of stars and stripes for the United States army, is likely to be removed bodily and taken to Chicago for exhibition at the World's fair. The building is owned by Mrs. Amelia Mund, and she has been asked to name a price
for the property, the prospective purchaser being a western gentleman. The Pennsylvania Historical society desires to buy the house and remove it to the park, alongside of Penn's house, but it has not the money available. Mrs. Mund would prefer that the old house remain in Philadelphia.—Philadelphia Record.

Make a Note of It!

Read it over and over again, spell it out and sing it, until it is indelibly fixed in your mind, that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is an infallible cure for chronic catarrh of the head, with all its distressing complications. Impaired taste and smell, offensive breath, ringing noises in the head, defective hearing, nose and throat ailments, are not only relieved, but positively and permanently cured! This is no fancy of the imagination, but a hard, solid fact, proven over and over again and vouched for, under a forfeiture of $500,
by its manufacturers, the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

The Heaviest Yoke of Steers.

In a freight train which passed through Hannibal on the St. Louis, Keokuk and Northwestern line from Burlington to St. Louis were the celebrated Walker twin steers. These cattle were registered at the Chicago exchange as the largest in the world. They were raised in Jasper county, Mo., by Mr.
Walker. Mr. Walker values them very highly, and will not ship them over a railroad unless the railroad insures them.
The railroad company had them insured
for $10,000. They are 6 years of age, 12 feet 6 inches long, 14 feet around the chest or heart, 3 feet 2 inches across the hips. Their aggregate weight is 8,040 pounds.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

At Last.

The long expected illustrated History
of Utah by the eminent historian, Hubert H. Bancroft, has at last appeared. It is absolutely a revelation.
After visiting the field in person, taking
testimony impartially from all sides,
critically reviewing the enormous
number of 1000 different authorities,
and searching many of the secret
archives of the Mormon Church, Mr.
Bancroft now gives to the World this wonderful and remarkable work the only
true history of Mormonism published.

The work reads like a romance—the wonderful adventures of trappers and travelers, the bloody Indian wars, the thrilling accounts of massacres, and
miraculous escapes, the famous Danite
Association or Destroying Angles, the story of Brigham Young—all this fresh
from the pen of the brilliant and gifted
author forms a narrative of exciting
interest, as fascinating as a novel yet
true to the letter. Above all in surpassing interest is the unfolding of the great Mormon question and the mysteries of Polygamy, which will be read with eager interest by all classes
of people throughout the English
speaking world. The work is published in one large handsome volume
of 800 pages, bound in red and gold,
and grandly illustrated with steel-plate
portraits of the great Mormon leaders,
exquisite half-tone engravings and dazzling colored plates. It is issued by the great Publishing House of the Pacific Coast—the History Company
of San Francisco, and can only be procured through their authorized agents.
We call attention to the advertisement
in another column, under heading of $25.00 Reward.

Let that suffice."

Yes, it might well suffice, Derwent
said to himself a little later, as he passed across the patio on his way to his own apartment, feeling exhausted by the manifold excitements of the day. Within the short space of twelve hours many things had occurred that he should never forget. That moment of close and deadly danger, the instant when he had seen Zarifa standing before him with her flashing glance and her lifted pistol, her womanly anguish at the sight of the fatally wounded assassin struck down by her own hand, her swift summons of assistance—these things were burned ineffaceably upon his memory. And not less vivid was the recollection of the moments in the twilight quiet of the cloistered court, when Zarifa and himself had stood alone together, and she had spoken with a confidence so touching that it had almost led him to a betrayal
that he felt would be the depth of folly.

Then he had walked beside her as she made one of the procession that followed Padre Francisco as, with accompanying acolytes, with shining tapers and silver bell and all the sweet and solemn state which the ritual prescribes, he bore the holy Host to the dying man. And what a scene that was upon which they entered? The hushed quiet, the kneeling forms and the radiance of lighted candles centering about the bed where he lay who in the morning had been a murderer in intent, and who now—oh, wonderful mystery of eternal love and pardon!—was to go forth on his last dread journey with that sacrament so fitly called the Viaticum of the dying.
Zarifa knelt just outside the door of the room, shielded from observation alike
by her black draperies and by the dusk of the court; but a few minutes after the communion, as she rose to go, Padre Francisco came out to her. "He wishes to speak to you," he said. "Nay, do not fear"—as she shrank back—"what he has to say will not distress you. He begs you to come."

She could not refuse then. Derwent saw her gather herself together with a supreme effort and very quietly, though pale as any statue, she followed Padre Francisco into the room. The young man almost held his breath as he gazed at the picture which she made, standing beside the bed looking down with a face which might have served a painter for that of the Mother of Mercy upon the worn, brown countenance out of which the dark eyes shone with a calm and solemn gaze, the gaze of a man whose regard is fixed upon eternity rather than upon time.

"Senorita," he said, so low that she stooped to hear him, yet so clear that Derwent, leaning against the door, heard every word, "I have asked you to come that I may thank you for saving me from the crime I should have committed this morning. I know that you are kind and gentle; I have thought that you might be sorry; and I wish to tell you that it is well for me that I am here.
I have been a very wicked man—my soul is stained with many crimes—and it is likely that I should have died as I have lived had you not brought me here, to make my peace with God. It is more than I deserve—far more than I deserve, senorita. Thank God when you think of me, and pray for my poor soul."

"So long as I live," she answered very gently, "I shall pray for you, and I shall have the holy sacrifice offered for the repose of your soul."

"It is more than I deserve," he repeated again. "Tell the senor whom I tried to kill that I thank God for preserving him, and I beg his forgiveness with all my heart. I have told the padre where his watch can be found, but the money, alas! is spent and gone."

"Tell him," said Derwent, when this was translated, "that I forgive him heartily, and that he need not trouble about the money. I hope that God may pardon him all his offenses against him
as freely as I pardon those he has committed against me."

"He is good," said the dying man when these words were repeated. "Senorita, there is but one thing more. My poor wife and children—if I could think that you would care for them?"

Dona Zarifa placed her slender white hand upon his as one who makes a solemn covenant.

"Be sure of it," she said. "I will bring them here. I will see that they do not want, and that your children have the influences that alone will save them from such a fate as yours. My poor brother, be satisfied of this. See! to make you very certain, I will promise on the image of our Lord."

She took from his breast a slender crucifix which the priest had laid there after the last sacraments, and lifted it to her lips. Then she touched it very tenderly to his. He looked at her with all his soul in his eyes, and with a last effort of strength took the hand which laid the crucifix again upon his heart, and kissed that also.

It seemed to Derwent, as he sat in his own room, somewhat worn out by these varying scenes, that the last was like the memory of a sacrament. Could he ever forget the expression with which that man had regarded the beautiful and tender face above him? And could he ever forget the look with which Zarifa had lifted the crucifix to her lips to seal her promise to the dying criminal? "She is an angel!" said the young man to himself, with a rush of adoration which made his heart burn as if with sensible fire,
"but she is as far above me, as far beyond my reach, as the very angels of God!"

He rose from his seat and began to pace to and fro, saying to himself that he must leave Miraflores, that it was impossible for him to remain longer and restrain the expression of the feeling which was passing beyond his control.
"I must go before I have forfeited the friendship," he thought. "An insane outburst may do that any day, and nothing could be more hopeless or more presumptuous. What am I in her eyes, or those of her father, but a mere adventurer, a stranger to whom they have given hospitality in charity? And even if they knew me for what I am, and if the ruin both of fortune and of good name was not hanging over me, how could I dream of aspiring to the greatest heirress in Mexico? What was it some one said—that her father would look only among the highest for an alliance for her? He is right. Yet where can any one be found who is worthy of her?

Oh, my beautiful princess with the courage of a warrior and the gentleness of a dove, one man, who has nothing to offer you but the passionate homage of his heart, would thank God if he might only die to serve you!"

Presently he sat down again wearily
in his chair. The lassitude that follows extreme emotion overpowered him. And then it was that he saw on the table a letter which had been placed there during his absence. He took it up with some awakening of interest, for it was addressed in his mother's handwriting.
"It is probably an answer to the account of my accident," he thought as he broke the seal. "And I have not given a thought to her anxiety. What a selfish being I am!"

It proved to be what he imagined. His mother had just received the news of his wound, and the first pages of her letter
were almost hysterical in their distracted anxiety. "I knew that something of this kind would befall you," she wrote.
"I was sure of it when you insisted upon going to that savage and dangerous country! I have not had an hour's respite from anxiety since you left, and when I received your letter saying that you were going into the mountains to look for mines—and what can you want with mines?—I said to Sibyl: 'He will simply be killed. I am sure of it.' So the news that you have been shot is an awful shock to me, indeed, but no surprise. Under the circumstances I suppose it will hardly surprise you that I am now making preparations to go to Mexico.
It is a terrible journey to undertake, but I cannot stay here to think of you wounded, ill, dying, perhaps, in some rude Mexican house—for although you said that you are in a comfortable place,
I fear that you say so only to relieve my mind—without attendance or care. I shall start as soon as possible, and travel night and day until I reach you. I will go first to the City of Mexico, and from there I will set out to find you wherever you may be. Sibyl will accompany me.
My own daughter could not be more sympathetic and tender. She comforted me when I was prostrated by the shock,
and it was she who suggested the journey to Mexico. Without her I could never attempt it; but she is so strong, so courageous, that she keeps me up, and she is making all the preparations for our departure while I am writing."

It is to be feared that when Derwent laid down this letter he uttered an ejaculation which was not very expressive of gratitude toward Miss Lenox. Few things could have annoyed him more than such a resolution as this on his mother's part, and as if her own presence in Mexico would not be enough of an embarrassment to him she must be accompanied by the person whom of all others he most disliked to meet. "Poor Sibyl!" he thought, with a thrill of compunction, "she does not deserve such thoughts from me; but when any one is associated with most painful memory
how is it possible to avoid shrinking from her? One thing at least is certain,
this cuts short any possible indecision on my part. But for this I might have found it hard to tear myself from Miraflores; but now the matter is taken out of my hands. I must leave without fail tomorrow."

A HUSBAND'S MISTAKE.

Husbands too often permit their wives, parents and children to suffer from headache, dizziness, neuralgia, sleeplessness, fits, nervousness, when by the use of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine such serious results could be easily prevented.
Druggists everywhere say it gives universal satisfaction, and has an immense sale. Woodworth & Co., of Fort Wayne, Ind.; Snow & Co., of Syracuse, N. Y.; J. C. Wolf, Hillsdale, Mich.; and hundreds of others say "it is the greatest seller they ever knew." It contains no opiates. Trial bottles and fine book on Nervous Diseases, free at Wm. T. Lee's.

Novelties in Note Paper.

Fashionable note paper includes pale blue, old pink, cream and copper colors.
The paper itself is quite plain, makes no attempt at ornament and only gains effect by its own beautiful color. Sometimes the top left corner of white paper has an imitation "dog's ear," on which a pretty black or red monogram is embossed. Some colored correspondence cards show a gold edge and small initials, and are now made in the long shape, with envelopes to match.

The Best Authorities.

Such as Dr. Dio Lewis, Prof. Gross, and others, agree that catarrh is not a local but a constitutional disease. It therefore requires a constitutional remedy
like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which effectually and permanently cures catarrh.
Thousands praise it.

Hood's Pills cure liver ills, jaundice, biliousness, sick headache, constipation
and all troubles of the digestive organs.

New gowns are to be seen with princess

No seed potatoes will be distributed this year by the department of agriculture. The eyes which have been shipped in past years were found too perishable, either rotting or freezing before they were planted, and whole potatoes are too bulky to handle.

No other preparation combines the positive economy, the peculiar merit and the medicinal power of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

About Washing Flannels

Dr. A. N. Bell, Editor of the Sanitarian, New York, writes:
"Pearline has gained special ascendancy in my household and in many others to my knowledge, for cleansing flannels. Your own directions for its use are those we abide by: 'Wash flannels by hand in lukewarm Pearline suds; rinse thoroughly in warm water; wring dry (by pressure through clothes wringer); pull and shake well; dry in warm temperature and they will keep soft without shrinking.'"

Danger As one wash is sufficient to ruin flannels, great care should be exercised as to the use of the many imitations which are being offered by unscrupulous grocers or peddlers. Pearline is never peddled.

West Brookfield, Quebec, Oct. 1, '90.

The Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic I ordered was for a young lady of my household, who was almost useless to herself and others, owing to nervous prostration, sleeplessness, weakness, etc. To-day there is quite a change. The young person is looking better, stronger, and less nervous. She will continue to use your medicine. I think it is very good.

The Monkey Stole the Angel's Wings.

The first week of the circus closed with an immense audience, whose liberal applause stimulated the performers to surpass their usual excellence.

The audience was treated to an entirely new version of the "Dawn of Christianity," the brilliant finale of the "Fall of Rome," when Jocko, the dog-faced baboon, took an unexpected part. Jocko enjoys considerable freedom, and during the performance he slipped unnoticed from his perch in the dressing room and emerged from a door in the heathen temple into the glare of the lime lights while Christianity was dawning.

Jocko recognized his dear friend Mme. Bumond posing as an angel with glistening wings, and in a mischievous spirit he snatched the wings, then turned and fled precipitously down the Apian Way.

Mme. Bumond pursued her departing wings, and the rest of the angels, convulsed with laughter, fled into the interior city. Then the spectators applauded the race between the baboon and the wingless angel until they disappeared within the gates of Rome. Hereafter Jocko will be obliged to confine his genius to his own specialty, in which he is eminently successful.—Philadelphia Press.

An Indignant Justice.

Justice Nichols, of Independence, is threatening to sue for damages, a couple who promised to be wedded in his court because they were married in Justice Prewitt's court. He claims it was a breach of contract.

On Tuesday night, so Justice Nichols says, he was approached by a gentleman who contracted for his services at a marriage to take place the next afternoon. The time drew near and the justice sat prim and neat waiting in his office for the coming of the couple. He had filled the application and had it ready for the signature of the prospective groom. The appointed time came and passed, but the couple that he waited for never came.

Meantime, in the office of Justice Prewitt, the couple were quietly married. They received their certificate and happily returned home. The justice was still waiting expectant when informed that the couple had already been married and returned home. He declared his intention of bringing suit against the groom for damages and breach of contract.

The justice is emphatic in his determination and says he will make it a test case.—Kansas City Times.

A GREAT MAGAZINE.

The Century's Programme in 1892—A New "Life of Columbus"—Articles for Each Number.

That great American periodical, THE CENTURY, is going to outdo its own unrivaled record in its programme for 1892, and as many of its new features begin with the November number, new readers should commence with that issue.

In this number are the opening chapters of "THE NAUHLAKA,"

a novel by Rudyard Kipling, the famous author of "Plain Tales from the Hills," written in collaboration with an American writer, Wolcott Balestier. It is the story of a young man and a young woman from a "boomtown" Colorado town, who go to India, he in search of a wonderful jeweled necklace, called "the Nauhlaka" (from which the story takes its name), and she as a physician to women. The novel describes their remarkable adventures at the court of an Indian maharajah. Besides this, THE CENTURY will print three other novels during the year, and a great number of short stories by the best American story writers.

The well-known humorist Edgar W. Nye ("Bill Nye") is to write a series of amusing sketches which he calls his "autobiographies," the first one of which, "The Autobiography of a Junior," is in the issue of November. This number also contains a valuable and suggestive article on "The Food-Supply of the Future," which every farmer should read. To be followed by a number of others of great PRACTICAL VALUE TO FARMERS, treating especially of the relations of the Government to the farmer, what it is doing and what it should do. This series will include contributions from officers of the Department of Agriculture, and other well-known men will discuss "The Farmer's Dilemma," "Cooperation," etc., etc.

A celebrated Spanish writer is to furnish a "Life of Columbus," which will be brilliantly illustrated, and the publishers of THE CENTURY have arranged with the managers of the World's Fair to print articles of the buildings, etc.

One of the novels to appear in 1892 is

A STORY OF NEW YORK LIFE

by the author of "The Anglomaniacs," and the magazine will contain a great deal about the metropolis during the year—among other things a series of illustrated articles on "The Jews in New York," in November is an illustration of "Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge's Club," founded by Edwin Booth, and one of the features of the splendidly illustrated Christmas (December) number is an article on "The Bowdler."

To get THE CENTURY send the yearly subscription price ($4.00) to THE CENTURY CO., Union Square, New York, N. Y.

"THE BEST OF CHILDREN'S MAGAZINES."

The publishers of ST. NICHOLAS, that famous young folks' magazine, are offering to send a sample copy, free of charge, to any father or mother who would like to consider the question of taking a children's magazine during the year to come.

Certainly if that question is up for discussion in any household ST. NICHOLAS will be the magazine selected. From its first number, in 1873, the pens of the greatest writers of the English world and the pencils of the most famous illustrators have been at its service. Tennyson, Longfellow, Bryant, Thomas Hughes, Whittier, Bret Harte, Bayard Taylor, Mrs. Burck, Miss Alcott, Donald G. Mitchell, George MacDonald, M. O. Dwyer, Professor Proctor are a few of the many great names which have been upon its list of contributors. Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge is the editor. Everything in it is illustrated.

In 1892

there are to be serial stories by Brander Matthews, Lieutenant Robert H. Fletcher (the author of that charming book, "Marjorie and Her Papa"), Laura E. Richards, William O. Stoddard, Charles E. Carryl (the author of "Davy and the Goblins"), and Frances Courtenay Taylor. There will be short stories by Thomas Nelson Page, Mary E. Wilkins, Mary Halleck Foote, Richard Malcolm Johnston, Octave Thanet, General O. O. Howard, and many others, with papers of travel and a sample of J. T. Trowbridge and Lieutenant Schwatka, and useful articles on "How Columbus Reached," "William the Conqueror," "Volcanoes and Earthquakes," "Straight Lines and Circles, etc. In "Strange Corners of our Country," the Great American Desert, the Gulf of Mexico, the Gulf of California, and other interesting places, will be described, and in "Honors to the Flag" and "Boys and the National Guard" the patriotism of the young readers will be aroused and stimulated. Julian Ralph is to describe "The Making of a Great Newspaper," and the rare and meager electric lights are to be clearly explained.

APPLIED CHRISTIANITY

is what ST. NICHOLAS teaches—unselfishness, faithfulness, courage, truthfulness—these things are taught in a hundred ways by stories, poems and pictures. Do you need such an assistant in your work with your boys and girls? If so, and if you are not already familiar with ST. NICHOLAS, send a postal card to The Century Co., Union Square, New York, N. Y., and ask to see a sample copy. A year's subscription to ST. NICHOLAS makes a splendid Christmas present, for it brings Christmas twelve times a year.

Opening Letters by Law.

"I noticed a short time ago," said a Washington official, "that some objection was made by a Mr. Pell, of the San Domingo Shore Line road, to the opening of a private letter by the chief of the secret service bureau. It is not generally known that the rules of the postoffice department empower inspectors to open suspicious letters at discretion. The public appear to be very much astonished at this proceeding mentioned, but I assure you that it is carried to a greater extent than even those who know all about it suppose. In fact, under the rules of the postoffice department almost any private letter can be opened and read. This will surprise some people, I presume, but it is nevertheless true, and a reference to the private instructions to postoffice inspectors, which are in printed form, will convince anybody of it. Whether secret privileges are ever used illegitimately would be difficult to find out. It is a good deal like arresting a man on suspicion. As a matter of fact, therefore, you will see the United States mails are no more sacred than the mails in Russia or any other country so far as government espionage is concerned."—New York Herald.

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS.

William T. Lee, druggist, believes that the secret of success is perseverance. Therefore he persists in keeping the finest line of perfumeries, toilet articles, cosmetics, drugs and chemicals on the market. He especially invites all persons who have palpitation, short breath, weak or hungry spells, pain in side or shoulder, oppression, night mare, dry cough, smothering, dropsy or heart disease to try Dr. Miles' unequalled New Heart Cure, before it is too late. It has the largest sale of any similar remedy. Fine book of testimonials free. Dr. Miles' Restorative Nerve is unsurpassed for sleeplessness, headache, fits, etc., and it contains no opiate.

Payday Comes After Eighteen Years.

Charles King, of Little Falls, has done a very commendable thing by paying $4,600 to the operators that worked in the Saxony mill at the time of the failure of A. & C. King, which occurred in 1873, during a depression of the knit goods trade. Mr. King was not obliged to pay this money, but he always said that the first time he controlled the amount of capital that would pay off the wages due at the time of their unfortunate failure he would meet all demands. One hundred and three persons, who were working in the mill on the day of suspension, have been made happy by receiving checks for their back wages. A few of the old employees have moved away and some are dead. The heirs of deceased operatives will be paid the amount due them.—Utica (N. Y.) Herald and Globe.

As the sun is superior to the stars, so DANA'S is superior to all other Sarsaparillas.

Played Cards During the Service.

There is great excitement at Wingate, Ind., over the arrest of a young man and a young woman for playing "seven up" at a meeting in the Christian church on Sunday evening. Adolphus Ocheltree and Miss Mary Prudy are lovers, and went to church together that evening. Not enjoying the prayers and songs, Adolphus tore the backs off a number of singing books and manufactured a deck of cards on the spot. The young people then played "seven up." They were arrested and fined, both pleading guilty.—Cor. Chicago News.

A Burglar Captured.

This morning about two o'clock, John Wood, the well-known plumber who resides on Main Street, was awakened by hearing glass break. On getting out of bed he received a blow on the head. He immediately grappled with the burglar, and after a terrible struggle succeeded in holding him until his wife obtained help. On being searched at the station, Mr. Wood's watch and wallet was found on his person. He gave the name of Robert Terry. The broken glass proved to be a bottle of Sulphur Bitters which had almost cured Mrs. Wood of rheumatism.—Exchange.

A man at Quebec, who received a fearful and almost fatal shock by touching an electric light wire, and suffered very keenly afterward, says that he was at once relieved by taking off his shoes and stockings and walking barefoot over the damp earth.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. Wm. T. Lee.

Unequalled for men, women, children. Smallest, mildest, surest! 50 doses, 25 cts. Samples Free, at William T. Lee's.

Men's Clothes.

"Men are becoming as bad as women for the adoption of strange and uncomfortable fashions in clothing," said a Fifth Avenue custom tailor, "and they need dress reform preached to them almost as much as the feminine sex. Take the high collars that are in vogue, and which are worn higher than ever this fall. They almost strangle one and chafe the skin until it is sore. Between the heavy, hot beaver hat and the tight collar, baldness is becoming rampant in our cities. The high, tight collar has as much to do with causing baldness as any other one thing. Then the modern style of fitting the clothes forces us to make them tight and snug all around, and this prevents one from really enjoying life.

"Tight patent leather shoes sweat and pinch the feet until walking is a painful exercise. Every time I see a dude with all of the latest style of modern clothes I pity him, and wonder that he submits to such voluntary torture. I can assure you that if his clothes fit him he is miserable. The old adage that if a man's clothes don't fit him he is uncomfortable has been reversed."—New York Times.

How to get a Handsome Husband.

"When'er some lucky Indian maiden Found a red ear in the husking, 'Muska!' cried they all together: 'Muska!' you shall have a sweetheart—'You shall have a handsome husband.' The handsome man always admires the beautiful woman. Then simply make yourself beautiful. Remove all blotches, pimples, 'forked signs of turkey tracks' from your features, by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, a tonic to the nervous, circulatory and procreative system. Its use brings roses to the cheeks, and sparkle to the eyes. Take it, and you will, like the Indian maiden, find a 'red ear' in good health, an omen of future happiness. Guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case or money paid for it refunded.

A Sea Island Nine Feet Across.

Captain John Richards, of the British ship Cambrian Monarch, reports having passed within half a mile of a pinnacle rock, showing about seven feet above the water, in latitude 29 degs. 2 sec. north, longitude 137 degs. 59 sec. west. No soundings were taken and no discolored water was seen except close to the rock. The sea was smooth, and from the top-sail yard the rock appeared to be about nine feet in diameter at the water's edge, but much larger under the water. Captain Richards says he is sure that it was not a floating object.—Philadelphia Record.

The President

Of the bank of Waverly, Iowa, says: Sulphur Bitters saved my life. For ten years I suffered from catarrh and liver complaint; I lost forty-five pounds and was growing worse rapidly. I lost all faith in medicine, but hearing your Bitters so well recommended, I gave them a trial. Six bottles cured me.—Smith P. Hunt, Waverly, Iowa.

Yellow Flowers Bring Ill Luck.

Actors have a queer superstition about yellow flowers, and will not wear them. While at Dr. Todd's booth at the fair grounds Miss Marie Greenwood saw some yellow flowers, and after admiring them asked for them. Mr. Guiberson, her leading man, was present and begged her not to take them, saying they would surely bring her ill luck. A laugh was indulged in at his expense and she took the yellow flowers. In an hour the opera house was in ashes, and Miss Greenwood's ill luck had cost her $7,500. The flowers got in their work.—Owensboro (Ky.) Register.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL

BOSTON MUSEUM.

"A Sailor's Knot" at the Boston Museum. Mr. Field has designated Monday, Nov. 30, for what is termed "the event of the season" at the Boston Museum, namely: the first production in this country of Pettit's great drama, "A Sailor's Knot," now running with extraordinary success at the Drury Lane Theatre, London. The production will be a most elaborate one in every respect, splendid new scenery, astonishing mechanical effects, unique costumes of the period, (1812), and a superb cast. While Mr. Field's company is famous for its efforts in a wide and varied range of plays, it has been pre-eminently successful whenever called upon to interpret the best class of melo-drama, always, by the way, a very popular form of entertainment with its intelligent patrons of which our readers form such a goodly number. In illustration of this, it will be remembered that "Harbor Lights" ran 19 weeks, (most five months!) "Hands Across the Sea" 17 weeks, and "Bells of Haselmers" 14 weeks. There is every reason to believe that this remarkable record will be beaten by "A Sailor's Knot," which is said to be Mr. Pettit's best work.

TREMONT THEATRE.

Next Monday night Boston will be able to pass judgment at the Tremont Theatre upon what all the northern critics have declared the best American play yet written, "Alabama," by Augustus Thomas, Esq. What the South thinks of this noble work can be somewhat judged from the following extracts.

"Alabama" presents a treatment of Southern life entirely different from anything yet essayed upon the stage. It is more just, more realistic, and more delightful in its whole tone than any of its predecessors.—Commercial, Louisville.

It is an epoch-making drama. He is the first dramatist that has succeeded in depicting the smooth, even flow of Southern life, and in presenting characters that appear to be really to the manner born. As a dramatist, Mr. Thomas deserves as high a place as Grady among orators, and as Page, Johnson, Harris and Allen among story-tellers.—Herald, Nashville.

"Alabama" deserves the praise it has received. There are sunbeams for the heart and tears for the eye in every act. Phases of Southern life and phases of Southern character are portrayed, not caricatured.—Appeal, Louisville.

"Alabama" is certainly one of the most artistic of comedies, either standard or modern.—Times-Democrat, New Orleans.

It is an American play and a Southern play, and one of its chief points of excellence is its perfect naturalness.—Weekly States, New Orleans.

MUSIC HALL.

The plan of the Cecilia Concert Company for providing the poor and middle classes with first class musical entertainments at prices ranging from 15 cents to quarter of a dollar is meeting with a high degree of appreciation. The enterprise elicits universal commendation. The first concert in the course will be given Monday evening in Music Hall.

PARK THEATRE

To view the subject in the abstract, an engagement of a year, for any play seems almost rash, but one has but to witness a performance of the "County Fair," to be satisfied the management of Park Theatre acted judiciously in securing that attraction for the period mentioned. Almost everybody is familiar with Nell Burgess and comment upon his matchless impersonations of feminine character would be superfluous. It suffices to say, his interpretation of "Aunt Abby" is in no way inferior to his earlier successes, and his delineations are ably seconded by a corps of talented artists. The scenic effects of the piece are pleasing and realistic. But the two scenes that are most highly appreciated by young and old are the barn, where surrounded by all the settings that make up a country farm barn, a real live Jersey leisurely munches the hay, as Tim-the-Farmer rides in at full speed, mounted on a fiery charger, and the race in which jockeys ride with as much jest as though "Cold Molasses" were not predestined to win the stakes. In the latter scene every mechanical device has been arranged, that could contribute to the realism of the portrait, and as the fiery chargers dash up and down the race-track one forgets for the time that he sits within the artificial bounds of a human structure, so great is the resemblance to a real out-of-door fair ground.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

There will be fun in abundance at the Grand Opera House next week on which occasion that admirable comedian William Barry and the popular Barry & Fay Comedy Company will be seen in Edgar Selden's laughable play "McKenna's Flirtation." This will be the last opportunity of seeing this merry comedy as Mr. Barry is shortly to produce his new play and the "Flirtation" will be laid upon the shelf. This is undoubtedly the greatest Irish comedy that was ever produced, and it seems almost too bad to lose such a good thing. If you want to enjoy a good jolly, continuous, hearty laugh, one that will make your side ache and keep a smile on your face for a week afterwards, do not fail to hear William Barry read that droll letter signed "Yours Forever, Mary Ellen Ryan," upon which is founded the story of this clever comedy.

There will be the usual Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday matinees.

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE

Of course Mr. and Mrs. Kendall are an artistic and financial success at the Hollis Street Theatre. The audiences have been large, fashionable and cultivated. The finished methods of these distinguished artists and their excellent company make their performances interesting. During the week they have been seen in "The Ironmaster," "A White Lie," "A Scrap of Paper," and the double bill, "The Queen's Shilling" and "A Happy Pair." For the last week of their engagement the following repertory has been arranged: Monday and Tuesday nights and Wednesday matinee Mr. and Mrs. Kendall will appear for the first time in this city in Tom Taylor's famous comedy "Still Waters Run Deep"; Wednesday evening (only time), "The Weaker Sex"; Thursday and Saturday nights, "All For Her"; Friday evening (only time), "Impulse"; Saturday matinee, "The Ironmaster." Dec. 7, brings Chas. Frohman's great New York production, "Thermidor," with Fred De Belleville and Elsie De Wolf in the cast.

COLUMBIA THEATRE.

The last week of the wonderfully successful run of Mr. Gillette's comedy "Mr. Wilkinson's Widows" begins on Monday at the Columbia Theatre. Mr. Joseph Holland's performance of Mr. Percival Perrin in "Mr. Wilkinson's Widows" is an agreeable surprise to the theatre-going public. It is one of the most exacting comedy roles that has been seen on the stage in a long time. His facial expression of the varied emotions which he depicts in the course of his three hours' incessant work is worthy of close study. Mrs. Georgie Drew Barrymore is a vision of loveliness as one of "Mr. Wilkinson's Widows." The role fits her personality to perfection. Her grace of person, carriage and figure and her manners make it stand out as a most engaging character. Miss Banker, Miss Ferguson and Miss Wood, Mr. Buras as the Major and Mr. Ryley are above criticism. Following "Mr. Wilkinson's Widows" and opening Monday night, Dec. 7, comes another of Manager Frohman's New York successes, "Jane," when other members of the Columbia's stock company will make their debut, notably Paul Arthur, R. F. Cotton, W. C. Dally, Herbert Fortier, Schintz Edwards, Joseph Totten, Miss Johnston Bennett, Miss Amelia Summerville, Miss Katherine Grey, Miss Maggie Holloway and others.

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhoea and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

Dr. G. C. Osgood,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

Dr. J. F. Kitchel, Cortway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.

NOTED AND QUOTED.

The moral which the St. Louis Post-Dispatch draws from the birth of Baby Cleveland is that the event will make babies fashionable, and that hereafter the matrons of the "Four Hundred" will vie with each other in seeing which can raise the largest family.—Newburyport News.

Don't vote for a man simply because he belongs to your church or lodge, is a neighbor or a good wire puller. Such men are well enough in their places but when you come to choose men to look after public affairs, you want those who are used to business matters, who possess brains, energy and common sense; who have a natural ability for public affairs and can afford the time, counting it an honor as well as a duty to faithfully perform the details which are required.—Gloucester Times.

It is the bounden duty of the state to see that every child within its limits has a secular training. If the parents want any particular form of religious belief added to the curriculum let them pay for it out of their own pockets. But in any event the whole matter should be left for settlement, not in the hands of the politicians of any party, not by narrow-minded people who would, if they could, proselyte the little ones left in their charge, but by broad-minded, liberal men and women, who love education for education's sake, and who are tolerant of the views of others. Haverhill Gazette.

Troubles drowned in alcohol will keep a long time. New York Herald.

A wooden dog-kennel should be built with the bark on and be lighted by a bay window. Lowell Courier.

Says the Newburyport News; Salem wants to start street car works. Better start them in Newburyport. We've got the room, we've got the men, we've got the prestige, too.

Feet and Hands Like a Duck.

A remarkable operation has just been completed at the Pennsylvania hospital in the case of Pedro Galan, a Mexican sailor lad to whom nature has given fingers and toes joined by a web similar to that of a duck.

Galan is about eighteen years of age, and last winter he arrived at this port as a cabin boy, afflicted with his curious deformity. At the time he suffered from pneumonia and became at once an object of interest to the hospital doctors. It was noticed that he had six fingers on each hand, joined by a web, and seven toes on his right foot and six toes on his left foot, joined by a web.

The nails of Galan's toes are decidedly peculiar, and at first sight he appears to have three distinct nails, as the nails of his toes have three ridges. His large toe on each foot is about two and a half inches in width.

Such was the strange patient that enlisted the sympathies of the doctors. Galan was the first to speak of his peculiarity, and he requested that he might be operated upon. His left hand was operated on in July last, and then Galan pluckily requested that his right hand should be attended to.

Dr. Morton went to work on the patient's right hand, and on Wednesday cut the web between the fingers and then sewed up the ragged edges of the web. It has not been determined to operate upon Galan's feet at present and probably when he does leave the hospital his feet will remain in what assuredly is their natural condition.

Galan will remain at the hospital some time yet, and is a handy man in the wards. In appearance he resembles an Indian, and is very much pleased with his life in Pennsylvania so far. Already photographs have been taken of his feet, and the pictures have been viewed with interest by the medical men to whom they have been submitted.—Washington Star.

Redeeming Destroyed Money.

Undoubtedly the redemption division does sometimes get swindled, though not often. The women expensé employed to examine the money sent in are wonderfully skillful. It is marvelous how deftly they will poke over a few charred fragments of notes and set an accurate valuation upon them. He other day a poor woman in Ohio set a wee corner of a twenty dollar bill, with a pitiful story about her baby having burnt it. Hardly more was left than a fragment large enough to show the figures of the denomination, but she will get the money back.

Mice are great destroyers of paper currency, and some of the most hopeless specimens that come have been chewed up for beds by the little rodents. Sometimes a pillow full of indistinguishable ashes will rive, accompanied by a certificate stating the amount represented. Of course such a case is hopeless. It is usually a kitchen stove catastrophe.—Washington Letter.

Library and Museum of War Relics.

Plans have been drawn for the erection in this city, of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion, of a library and museum of war relics, which would in time become a most valuable institution. The history of the war has not yet been written, and probably cannot be until all who took part in the struggle have passed away, and then it must be written by some patient, disinterested historian, who shall examine all the evidence on disputed questions of fact, which he can do only by the aid of a great reference library. The Loyal Legion is engaged in a national undertaking, but it is one of peculiar local interest to Philadelphia, where it is proposed to erect this great memorial of the war.—Philadelphia Ledger.

LITERARY NOTES.

We are in receipt of the Baby Pathfinder dated November 15. As usual it contains correct time and distance schedules of all the New England railroads, together with a great deal of other valuable information for the guidance of regular or occasional tourists.

An interesting series of papers, "Stories of Salem Witchcraft," by Winfield S. Nevins, is begun in the December New England Magazine. The first article gives an account of the witchcraft cases in New England previous to 1692; the outbreak in Salem Village; the court and places of trial; a full history of the trials of accused persons, and copious quotations from the remarkable testimony in the court files are given, and the article is embellished with many portraits and drawings now published for the first time, and made specially for this series. The article is particularly interesting at this time, as the one hundredth anniversary of this remarkable delusion is approaching.

The letters of General Sherman now being published in the Cosmopolitan are unique; in fact, so far as the writer knows, they are the only letters ever written in the midst of hostilities by a great general to his daughter. We have the brief letters of Napoleon to Josephine, but there is nothing at all resembling the Sherman letters to be found in the literature of war. They not only throw a new light upon the character of the great man himself, but upon the operations then in process of being carried out. The second and last paper, which appears in the December Cosmopolitan, is unique in another respect,—that it is illustrated by a man who sat at Sherman's mess table during the campaigns of which he writes to his daughter. This most famous of war artists, Theodore R. Davis, is still alive, and supplements the Sherman letters by a very interesting paper of his own and a great number of sketches which he made at that time. Perhaps the article in the December number which will be read with the widest interest is that on Rapid Transit, by Captain Lewis M. Haupt.

Miss Mamie Dickens, who was always known as the favorite daughter of Charles Dickens, has written, for the Christmas number of the Ladies' Home Journal, her first story. It is a semi-ghost tale of the romance of an old English manor. Miss Dickens' only piece of literary work previous to this story was the editing of her father's letters for publication. She is said to possess true literary talent.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Bald headed man (who inclines to be facetious)—I am getting to be pretty bald. Suppose you'll have to cut my hair for half price hereafter, eh? Tonsorial artist (who is equal to the emergency)—Oh, no, sir; we always charge double when we have to hunt for the hair.

Boarding House Robbery.

A man called at Ham's boarding house on Main street yesterday and asked for board and room, saying he was going to work at Lennox & Son's factory. Mrs. Ham showed him his room, when he said he had a bundle at the depot and went out to get it. He went directly to Jacobs' clothing store where he obtained a piece of brown wrapping paper. He next proceeded to the dump near Ray & Murray's paint shop and picked up an old can which he carefully wrapped up in his paper, and returned to the house.

No particular attention was paid to him and he went out unnoticed and was not seen afterwards. At supper time, nothing having been seen of him an investigation was instituted, when it was found he had taken a silver watch, overcoat, knife, razor and pipe, all property of boarders.

A similar game has been worked at Salem this week and it is thought to have been done by the same thief.

Sutton Home Fair.

The fair in aid of Sutton Home was formally opened at five o'clock, Tuesday afternoon. In the evening a concert by the Salem Cadet Band consisting of eighteen pieces was listened to by a good sized audience, who doubtless appreciated the music notwithstanding the unfeeling manner with which the numbers were received.

Wednesday evening supper was served by the ladies and about 300 sat at the tables.

Thursday night was given over to the young people, who enjoyed a social dance.

There were some opportunities afforded to test the judgment of all who wished to invest the customary time. A pole erected at the front of the stage was variously estimated from 7 to 27 feet in height; while a loaf of cake and a bottle of shoe pegs called forth correspondingly random guesses.

The pole with the hat on the end of it measured 17 feet 2 3/4 inches, which was the guess of Charles W. Jenkins, who was the correct guesser out of 196. The bottle of pegs contained 1886, the number guessed by Percy King, who was awarded the parlor clock. One of the bean bottles contained 1864 beans, and the prize, a blanket, will have to be settled between Miss Mary Farley and Mrs. W. Clark, who each guessed 1860. The other bottle of beans counted out 2196 and the basket of fruit went to G. Fred Osgood, who guessed 2202.

The fair was a financial success but was marked by the absence of the usual large and varied display of fancy work. Of the articles displayed, many were sold within an hour or two of the time of opening.

Collision on Boston Street.

At a few minutes of seven o'clock Thursday night conductor Conway's electric car, leaving Washington street for Peabody at 6 45, ran into conductor Gilmore's electric car from Peabody in Blubber Hollow.

The two cars came together with considerable force, the front platform and windows of the down car being smashed. Both drivers did their utmost to avoid the collision, reversing their motors and setting the brakes, but the dampness rendered the rails so slippery that it was impossible to prevent the meeting.

Conductor Gilmore had the right of way and was due at Fowler street turn-out, when the car met him. There were eight passengers coming from Peabody, but the car from Salem had a good freight. There were several cases of slight cuts from glass, but only three persons were severely injured.

Mrs. Letitia Busted, of No. 2 Silver street, was thrown through the door of the up car against Officer William M. Peabody, who in turn came down upon James Moriarty. Mrs. Busted was severely shaken up and bruised. One of her legs was sprained. She was taken into Alderman Turner's house, and thence to her home in a coach.

Mr. Moriarty was quite badly hurt and was carried into a house, where he subsequently rallied and was sent home. Mr. Peabody received no injury. Motorman Lundregan of the down car twisted one of his feet, and received a severe sprain.

Besides these a man named Lee received a cut upon the face.

Don't Appreciate It.

Peabody turns out the most unappreciative audiences to be found on the earth. The Cadet band concert in the Town hall Tuesday evening, was the finest ever given in town; it was superb, yet hardly a single number was properly recognized with applause.—Salem Evening News.

No wonder it sells so!

IT IS BECAUSE
The Cured are all Around You!

Fred L. Brown is a prominent citizen of Palmyra, Me. Naturally energetic, it was hard to find himself the victim of fell disease. No appetite—when he did eat then came the agony of indigestion and deadly faintness in the morning at pit of stomach. Sick headache later in the day, and nature was constantly trying to throw off the impurity of his blood in the form of Boils and Abscesses. This was his condition. Well, you say, what of it! O, nothing, only this.—FOUR BOTTLES OF DANA'S SARSAPARILLA cured, yes, ACTUALLY CURED him. Had you rather be cured than suffer? If you had, remember DANA'S is the only SARSAPARILLA GUARANTEED TO CURE.

Blown up with a Bomb.

A lunatic entered the office of Russell Sage, 47 Broadway New York yesterday at noontime and obtained a short interview by representing he had a letter from Rockefeller. He demanded $1,200,000. Mr. Sage seeing his condition, humored him by saying: I would take time to collect so much. The crank threatened to blow up the building, if not complied with at once. Mr. Sage turned to back out, when the threat was executed.

The mad man lost his own life and destroyed that of a clerk beside badly damaging the building and frightening everybody in it.

A Just Judgement.

The "weavers' fines" act, passed by the Legislature of 1891, and brought before the Supreme Court in an appeal case by Josiah Perry, a Dudley manufacturer, has been pronounced unconstitutional by the full bench. Judge Holmes dissenting. The law imposed a penalty not exceeding $100 for the first and $300 for subsequent offences as follows:—

"No employer shall impose a fine upon or withhold the wages or any part of the wages of an employee engaged at weaving for imperfection that may arise during the process of weaving."

In the case of the Commonwealth vs. the Potomack Mills Company of New Bedford, the defendant was indicted under the weavers' fines act for withholding the wages of Arthur W. Briton, and that case is governed by the decision in Perry's case. The court holds that the act impairs the obligation of contracts which is forbidden by the constitution of the United States.

Notes in The Electric World.

The polar night at Hammerstien, Norway, begins on Nov. 18 and lasts until Jan. 23, but hereafter the 2,000 inhabitants will enjoy the benefits of electric light during that period. Each house in the hamlet has an electric light. The current is generated by three small but swift streams a short distance away.

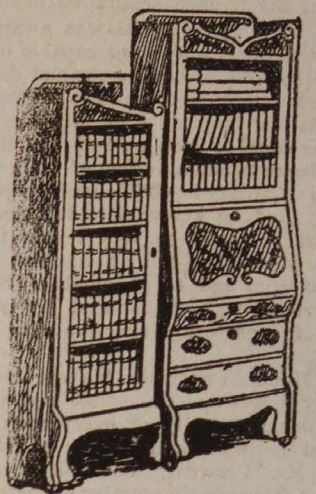

The power for the Giant's Causeway Electric Railway is derived from two turbines. The road is eight miles in length. The current for the electric railway at Burgenstock, near Lucerne, Switzerland, is generated by two dynamos worked by a water wheel 125 horse power. Water from a large fall between Pazzala and Lugano, Italy is conducted through iron pipes to two turbines of 300 horse power each. The connected dynamos generate continuous and alternating currents for power and lights.

In an electric hammer that has been devised recently the piston is of a magnetic material and the cylinder is composed of a series of coils, through each of which a current of electricity may be passed. The passage of a current through the upper coils raises the piston. By cutting off the current and transferring it to the lower coils the piston is released and drawn down. The blow may be shortened or lengthened, as desired, by regulating the distribution of the current in the coils.

Efforts have been made in London to discover some artificial product to be used as insulating material instead of gutta percha and rubber, which are expensive. Combinations and treatment of materials, such as waste leather, have met with some success.

An arc lamp that combines the principles of the incandescent and arc lamps has been invented. One carbon is a tube and the other a round rod, the rod fitting into the tube and being insulated from it by a layer of asbestos. When the flanged hand of the inner carbon is in contact with the cylinder an arc is formed. The carbons are consumed slowly in a vacuum.

Electric Railways.

The West End Street Railway Company has permanently installed the electric system on Washington street after a thorough trial upon Tremont street and the avenue.

Some important changes in the running of certain lines have resulted. General Manager Monks says the experiment has been tried and found successful and electricity has come to stay. He does not indicate a belief in radical improvements upon the present system for some time yet.

CHAPTER XV.

And without fail he did leave. It was like wrenching apart the very fibers of his being, but he knew that there must be no delay. In the first place, it was well that the wrench should be made quickly, and secondly, he was aware that his mother was quite capable of coming in search of him, as she had declared her intention of doing. He was sure that the hospitality of Miraflores would be equal to such a strain, but he had no desire to add a burden of obligation which already he could hardly hope to repay, and he knew, moreover, that the journey would be very trying to Mrs. Derwent. The thing to do, therefore, was to go and to go quickly. So the next morning he announced his intention of departure, giving the reason thereof.

Don Maurizio expressed his regret so cordially that it was impossible not to believe in the sincerity of every word. "I hoped that we should keep you a little longer, Mr. Derwent," he said, "and now that this annoying matter of the investigation into your shooting is over, that we might have had a little conversation on business. But your mother's arrival, of course, makes it imperative that you should go. However, if you remain for any length of time in Mexico I may see you there. I had not intended to go down for some weeks yet, but I think it will be well to take my daughter as soon as possible away from here. Yesterday's tragedy has been a great shock to her nerves, and the sooner she is away from its associations the better."

"I am sure of it," said Derwent, who felt like a relieved criminal. The sentence of death—of separation to which he could see no end—that had been hanging over him was lifted; life seemed to flash back into his heart and veins; he was almost afraid that the irrepressible gladness of his voice would betray him. "I am delighted to hear of your resolution," he went on, "for Dona Zarifa's sake, because I am sure the tragedy has been a terrible shock to her, and for my own, because I shall have the great pleasure of seeing you again, and my mother will be able to thank you for your wonderful kindness to me."

"What we have been able to do has been fully repaid by the pleasure of your society," said Don Maurizio. "Frankly, it has been long since I have met so companionable a man. You can be no stranger to Miraflores after this, Mr. Derwent. If you like us as well as we have learned to like you there is no question but that you will come back."

"I would cross the world to come back," cried the young man earnestly. After this, the farewell to Dona Zarifa which he had dreaded became easy. It wrung his heart to see on her face the pallor and purple transparent shadows of yesterday still visible, but even this had not power to damp the happiness with which he said, "I hope to have the great pleasure of seeing you in Mexico, senorita. Don Maurizio tells me that he will be there with you in a few days."

"In a few days, papa?" she said, with surprise. "I thought we should not leave Miraflores for some time."

"I find that it will be necessary for me to go down to Mexico as soon as possible," he answered, "and in that case it will not be worth while to return here before going to the Bajito. A few weeks in the city will do us both good. I will write today and order the house put in order for our coming."

Was it Derwent's fancy, or was there a light of pleasure in the dark eyes as they met his own? "In that case, senor," she said, with gentle graciousness, "we need not bid you a long adieu. It is enough to wish you a pleasant journey, and to hope that you may soon be able to relieve the anxiety of the senora your mother."

So, with a much lighter heart than he had fancied possible, Derwent rode out of the great gates of Miraflores, and looked back many times at the long arched dwelling on its lovely plateau, its soft cream color thrown into relief by the green hills behind it, and the cross above its chapel pointing heavenward. At a turn of the road where he knew that the last glimpse was to be had he paused and took off his hat, in final salutation to all that had been revealed to him there—the boundless hospitality and charity, the kind and useful lives, the widely diffused circle of good, the simplicity, the gentleness and the happiness which formed a golden atmosphere about the spot.

The third day after this found him entering the City of Mexico again, and hardly able to believe the evidence of the calendar that it had been little more than a month since he had left it to seek the Buena Esperanza. Although by no means sure how far Morell had been engaged in the business schemes of the redoubtable Fernandez, he had telegraphed him from Guadalupe requesting him to look at the hotels for Mrs. Derwent, and if she had arrived to keep her in the city. He was not very much surprised, therefore, to find Morell awaiting him at the station.

"Has my mother come?" was his first question.

"Yes; she arrived yesterday," Morell answered, "and had only been here an hour or two when I received your dispatch and looked her up. She was very anxious about you and much relieved to hear that you were on the way to meet her. But, my dear fellow, what can I say for myself? I hardly know how to express my regret that such an accident should have befallen you—something no one could possibly have foreseen."

"Unless it was your friend, Senor Fernandez," said Derwent dryly. "He not only foresaw, but planned the whole thing and had it executed."

"Derwent!" Morell exclaimed. He stopped—for they were walking together down the long platform—and looked at the other as if doubtful whether he had heard him aright. "What do you mean?" he asked. "That is a very grave accusation."

"It is a plain statement of a fact," replied Derwent. "The assassin came to finish his work, but was, fortunately, shot before he could do so. He lived long enough to tell the whole story however. And then he related it briefly."

There could be no doubt that Morell was deeply and terribly shocked. "I knew that he was slippery—very slippery—and I suspected that he was a scoundrel," he said, alluding to Fernandez, "but I never could have imagined him capable of such dastardly villainy as this. He wrote me that Barrera was certainly accountable for the crime."

"To fasten it on Barrera was his chief object," said Derwent. "By the bye, do you know how he obtained the bond to that mine?"

Morell had the grace to blush. "I do not know exactly," he replied; "but I suspect it was in a very unscrupulous manner. He told me that he could bring political pressure to bear. I suppose you think that I ought not to have sanctioned anything of the kind. But our bargain was that he was to get the mines and I was to sell them. I had no business to interfere with his manner of getting them."

"The receiver of stolen goods might say as much," observed Derwent, with scorn. "A man of honor does not wish to profit by dishonesty in any form. I tell you frankly that there is not silver enough in all Mexico to tempt me to touch a mine with a title acquired as that of the Buena Esperanza was."

"I hope you do not think that I shall touch it further," said Morell. "Henceforth I shall wash my hands of Senor Fernandez. I might endure cheating, but attempted assassination is a little too much. Here is a carriage. You can drop me at San Francisco street, and you will find your people at the Hotel del Jardin."

"At least the shooting did you one good turn," he added, as they rolled out of the station gates; "it domesticated you in the hacienda of the Ormonds. I said to myself, 'What luck some fellows have!' as soon as I heard of it. And how did you like Dona Zarifa on acquaintance? Odd, wasn't it, our discussing her that day in the Alameda?"

"Did we discuss her?" said Derwent, who had a feeling as if the other took an unwarrantable liberty in even mentioning her name. "I never received greater kindness in my life than from every one at Miraflores. Don Maurizio picked me up in the road, you know. He is a magnificent type—grand seigneur, yet simple, cordial, kind beyond belief."

"Oh, no doubt," said Morell. "But how about Dona Zarifa? Is she as unapproachable as she looks? Or could a man venture to fall in love with her?"

"That would depend entirely upon the man," replied Derwent. "You have heard, no doubt, that fools sometimes rush in where angels fear to tread. I hope that I am at least not quite a fool. But tell me about my mother. How has she borne the journey?"

He was soon able to answer this question himself. He had hardly entered within the grilles of the Hotel del Jardin and taken a few steps along the wide gallery that runs around two sides of the immense quadrangle which incloses the beautiful old garden of the monastery of San Francisco, when he was met by a tall young lady with frank hazel eyes and red brown hair, who uttered a cry and held out both hands in welcome.

"My dear Geoffrey, how delighted I am to see you!" she exclaimed. "And you are really alive and well? What an awful fright you gave us! Are you not ashamed?"

"My dear Sibyl," Derwent retorted, "are not you ashamed to have let my mother come on such a journey? If you had only believed the explicit statements of my letter!"

"But we didn't believe them," she interposed. "At least your mother did not; she thought you were trying to spare her, and seeing her misery I thought the best thing for her to do was to come and satisfy herself. I am certain you would have thought so too if you had been there."

"No doubt I should," he answered. "At least I should be a wretch to find fault with so much goodness, especially on your part. I am deeply grateful to you for undertaking the journey to accompany my mother."

"I am more than rewarded," she answered. "This is the most enchanting place I have ever wandered into. But come! Cousin Margaret is expecting you, and afraid even yet that you may be brought in on a litter."

He laughed as he followed her toward the door of one of the charming apartments surrounding the gallery, and paused in the sitting room while she opened the door of the spacious chamber beyond and said gayly: "Dear cousin, here is your truant. Come and scold him."

The next instant Derwent saw the slender, black clad form and pale, lovely face of his mother, with a wistful look in the deep blue eyes, as she said, "My boy! is it really you at last!"

After the first eager questions had been answered and Mrs. Derwent's anxiety somewhat reassured, Derwent found another surprise in store for him.

"You had no trouble in the journey, I hope?" he said. "It was too bad your having had to take it without a masculine attendant; for that is something you at least are not accustomed to, mamma. Sibyl, now, belongs to the new order of independent young ladies—she would start out with a maid to go around the world—but you are of the ancient regime, and I fear that it was very disagreeable to you."

"Oh, has Sibyl not told you?" said Mrs. Derwent. "We did not come alone. I confess I should have disliked that very much; though of course, my dearest boy, I would have done that or anything else to reach you. But Frank Halbert came with us. It was very kind of him."

"Frank Halbert!" repeated Derwent in surprise. Then he threw back his head and laughed uncontrollably. "Why you organized a regular relief expedition!" he said. "What a picture you would have made coming to storm Miraflores!"

"You are very ungrateful, Geoffrey," said Miss Lenox. "It may be a laughing matter to you now, but it was not a laughing matter when we thought we might find you dying or dead. What could two women in a strange country have done in that case? One had to think of these things. So it was exceedingly kind of Mr. Halbert to accompany us."

"It certainly was, uncommonly kind," said Derwent, recovering his gravity. "and I beg your pardon for laughing. Halbert is a very good fellow always. Where is he?"

"I parted with him near the office just before I met you. He went in to make some inquiries. Ah, here he is!"

A handsome man of about thirty, well set up, with keen eyes looking out of a refined face, appeared at the partly open door as Miss Lenox spoke. "So here you are!" he said, holding out a cordial hand to Derwent. "It is a satisfaction to see you still living, and upon my word, young man, I begin to fear this thing has been a hoax. You are looking very well."

"Oh, Frank!" said Mrs. Derwent reproachfully. "I do not think so. He is pale and thin."

"I ought to be looking well," said Derwent. "If the best of care could make me so. I have been doing nothing but enjoying an ideal life and recovering my strength. My wound, however, is not yet healed, and gives me some trouble."

"You must have the best medical advice at once," said Mrs. Derwent, while Halbert looked at Sibyl and laughed.

"This is pleasant, is it not?" he said. "Think of our anxiety to reach the sufferer, our hurried journey without pause, our eager desire to relieve him from the discomforts he was supposed to be enduring—while all the time he was 'enjoying an ideal life' and recovering his strength in the most satisfactory manner! I don't know what you may think of our journey to the land of the Montezumas, Miss Lenox, but I feel rather ridiculous."

"I do not," replied Miss Lenox, loftily. "We came to relieve Cousin Margaret's anxiety and to help her in any need that she might have for us. Of course, incidentally, we should have been glad to have relieved Geoffrey also."

"But, since Geoffrey has behaved so shamefully as not to need relief, you are ready to put him aside severely," said that gentleman smiling. "Come, now, is that quite fair? I am extremely sorry that you have taken such a long journey for such an insufficient reason, but I feel your kindness to my mother more than I can possibly express. And now that you are here, don't you think you may find something to enjoy?"

"I am sure of it," replied Sibyl frankly. "Since our anxiety about you was relieved by Mr. Morell's visit yesterday I have enjoyed every sight and sound. Yes, on the whole, we will magnanimously forgive you for getting well before we came. And now tell us all about your ideal hacienda."

"I have only one improvement to suggest," said Halbert. "The hacienda is chapter second. Let us have chapter first—the whole authentic account of the shooting, with the cause thereof."

Derwent hesitated for a moment. Should he tell the whole or only part of that story? Nothing would have induced him to mention Dona Zarifa's name in connection with the final tragedy when speaking of it to Morell, but these were his nearest friends and relatives. Was it not right that he should let them know the full greatness of his obligations? So he told the whole story, and never was narrative listened to with more rapt attention. Three pairs of widening eyes were fastened on his face as he spoke, and when he finished Mrs. Derwent fairly broke into sobs.

"Oh, my dear," she cried, "what can we ever do to show our gratitude to those kind people? They have saved your life twice over. And that heroic girl! How I long to see and thank her!"

"I, too, have a great desire to see the girl," observed Halbert.

"I would go across Mexico to see her!" cried Sibyl. "Happy creature! to be able to do heroic things, not dream of them! Geoffrey, my respect for you has increased. There must be something more in you than I ever imagined for fate to have selected you as the central figure of such a story."

"I played a very subordinate part in it, Sibyl," said Derwent. "My role was subjective altogether. All the honors belong to Dona Zarifa."

CHAPTER XVI.

The next few days were full of varied pleasure for the relief expedition, as Derwent still laughingly called the party that had come so far to seek him. Though he had spoken lightly, he was in reality very grateful to Halbert, as well as to Sibyl Lenox, and he was determined to spare no effort to reward them for their kindness. Consequently he worked energetically in arranging expeditions of sight seeing, in organizing all the details which make such expeditions pleasant, and in providing them with many glowing memories of the beautiful Mexican capital to carry away with them.

Even Mrs. Derwent enjoyed the novel and brilliant sights, the picturesque life and the marvelous charm of the climate, notwithstanding her perennial surprise at the highly civilized aspect of most things around her. "Why, this is like Paris!" she exclaimed in her amazement, when she first saw the Paseo at the fashionable hour—the roadway thronged with handsome equipages, which rolled down the wide avenue fit for the triumphal progress of an emperor, with flashing wheels, gleaming harness, high stepping horses and all the outward paraphernalia of luxury and wealth, or paused for a few minutes in the superb circle, where a band was filling the air with melody, just as the long, level rays of parting sunlight flooded the atmos-

A ringing noise in the ears, headache, deafness, eyes weak, obstruction of nose, discharges falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, bloody and putrid; offensive breath; smell and taste impaired, and general debility. Not all of these symptoms at once. Probably only a few of them.

That's Catarrh.

A medicine that by its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties has cured the most hopeless cases. One that will cure you, no matter how bad your case or of how long standing. A medicine that doesn't simply palliate for a time, but produces perfect and permanent cures.

That's Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

A cash payment of $300, not by you, as you might expect, but to you, if you can't be cured. It's an offer that's made in good faith, to prove their medicine, by responsible men, the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Remedy. That's the kind of medicine to try. Doesn't it seem so?

THE FOLLOWING editorial which we clip from the Salem Gazette, while expressing kindly wishes voices clearly the sentiment of civil service reform.

"Mr. Wm. H. Merrill, the new postmaster of Salem, received his commission yesterday and will enter upon his duties today. His first assistant will be Mr. Willard A. Ashby, late bookkeeper with Messrs. Abbott & Reynolds. We hope Mr. Merrill will meet with good success in his administration, and that he will merit a continuance in office beyond the bounds of any political administration if there should be a change of parties in power. He is personally popular, and his relations with the public are not likely to be otherwise than pleasant and satisfactory."

IN THE candidacy of Elihu B. Hayes, Lynn has the opportunity within her grasp of electing a gentleman to the chief magistracy of her municipal government, whose character and ability have been duly tried while serving a district which comprises a section of Lynn, in the Massachusetts Legislature. In that body, he won the confidence and esteem of all, and ranked among the leaders in the branch where served, at the same time wielding no little influence in the upper branch.

Mr. Hayes has the distinction of being the father of the Australian ballot system, which measure of reform should commend him to all whose privilege it is to exercise the elective franchise in the city of shoes. He represents the best element of politics, and can be counted on for reform measures every time.

It is no trivial distinction to fill the mayoralty chair in a city like Lynn, for in the discharge of the duties of that office would a man like Mr. Hayes attract one iota from the honor and dignity of the position.

NEGOTIATIONS WHICH for two months or more have been going on between the stock-holders of the Naumkeag and Essex Electric railroads for the purchase of the latter by the former, were concluded this week, and thus ends the competition by which the public was benefited at the expense of those who had their money invested in the enterprise.

The Essex Electric road was organized in June 1889 and chartered for business the following February, the original intention being to establish and maintain a competing line which should be a source of benefit to the public and profit to the stockholders, but difficulties of various kinds arose, which greatly increased the estimated expenses and thereby barred the possibility of any immediate dividends to stockholders, which naturally caused uneasiness, and a desire to be rid of the incubrance.

To the action of Salem Aldermen in withholding the necessary permit to extend the electrical equipment to the Willows, as much as anything else may be attributed the failure of the scheme as a separate establishment.

Under the new management the expenses will be reduced to a minimum, only two cars will be run over the route making half-hour trips, and every expedient for curtailing the cost of operating will be necessarily resorted to. The retrenchment will be necessary to maintain the road, and doubtless the management of the Naumkeag road will give to residents along the line all the conveniences they feel they can afford.

In the transfer which has been effected, it is pleasing to note that the small stock-holders have been provided for. It is said their condition is improved rather than otherwise by the plan arranged for their protection, but which is not at present made public. So far as known, at any rate, all are satisfied that Mr. Norcross in disposing of his holdings has acted perfectly honorably.

A DESPERATE effort is being made by Sawtelle the fratricide to escape the death penalty he so richly deserves, by a confession of the homicide supplemented by the claim that the awful deed was committed in Maine instead of New Hampshire.

He has filed two affidavits, and some new witnesses have been trumped up to give color to his claim to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

The affidavits are in marked contradiction each to the other and should discredit his pretensions in the mind of court or public; but there is a growing tendency on the part of magistrates to assist in finding ways of escaping the death penalty, which serve only as an encouragement to increase capital crimes, and many of the old precedents are horribly distorted to accomplish the end.

The Court in the present case has relaxed the rules far more perhaps than they have ever been before, and assigned a hearing upon the petition for Monday, when the prisoner is expected to make some lengthy statements, which have been carefully thought out, in the hope of cheating justice.

If we have outgrown the age of capital punishment, as sometimes appears, the quicker the laws are altered, the better, and one of the most important steps to be taken in abolishing executions is to remove all hope of pardon, by abrogating the pardoning power.

While the possibility of pardon at some time, however distant, remains, there is no adequate deterrent to the commission of homicides. Without the prospect of pardon, the chances of escape upon new trials and legal quibbles afford more encouragement than is beneficial to public interests.

ESSEX COUNTY.

The police and chief engineer of the Beverly fire department do not believe that the fire in Wallis, Kilam & Bray's shoe factory last Sunday was incendiary but think it caught from overheated woodwork.

Two workmen at Haverhill were completely buried by the caving in of a trench on Monday. Ferdinand Nichol was badly injured, but may recover. Antonio De Roche was taken to the hospital.

Among this week's patents are the following: Wm. Y. Ober, Lynn, shoe sewing machine; John R. Robinson, assignor of one half to T. E. Lawrence Peabody, electric motor; Thos. A. Taylor, assignor of one half to J. W. Taylor, Beverly, indicator for grunding drills.

Lynn's school committee recommended, at its meeting on Monday evening, that a special teacher of the Swedish system of physical training be employed. The high school battalion was divided into two battalions. The sanitary committee reported that the Baltimore street primary school was not in an unhealthful condition.

The body of the woman killed at the Eastern Railroad at East Somerville Nov. 17 is still at Undertaker Marsh's on Perkins street, East Somerville. It is believed from recent advices that the woman's name is Agnes M. Wolcott. This name was found stamped on her clothing, and from investigations made it will likely lead to her identification. It is learned that she recently worked at the Danvers Insane Asylum and that she has a husband living who recently worked in Westboro.

Rev. Dr. Whittaker, pastor of the Lynn Methodist church, while on a lecture tour of Maine, went out deer hunting and was lost in the woods. After two days wanderings without food, he was rescued many miles from camp. That is according to Bangor's papers. The Rev. denies that he was lost.

The successful test of the largest electric locomotive in this country, which was made at the works of the Thompson-Houston Electric Company at Lynn on Saturday afternoon, is of more significance than would at first appear. The machine, which was constructed to do a certain amount of work, developed an unexpected efficiency, carrying more than double the burden contemplated. There is a large and growing field for an engine of this description which is practically noiseless, is compact and efficient. This machine is designed to pull and shift freight cars at Whitinsville, Mass. for the White Machine company. The locomotive is equipped with a powerful motor of the "G" type, of the Thompson-Houston Electric company.

The Beverly police on Tuesday arrested several boys for petty larceny.

The fishing firm of D. C. & H. Babson, Gloucester, has suspended.

John Long was relieved of a silver watch by a pickpocket in Lynn on Tuesday.

Georgetown has a new industry just started—the James' Hoop Mill, which employs quite a force of hands in the manufacture of wooden hoops for barrels and kegs of all descriptions.

Hotel Porter—I called No. 21 an hour too early this mornin'. Clerk—Did he get up? Porter—He got his back up!

Mother (horrified) what did you let that young Snipkins kiss you for? Daughter (meekly) For only two minutes mamma, and then I told him to stop.

THE Springfield Republican For 1892.

AN INDEPENDENT, COMPLETE AND ABLE NEWSPAPER.

THE REPRESENTATIVE JOURNAL OF NEW ENGLAND.

Established in 1824 by Samuel Bowles.

Published DAILY, SUNDAY and WEEKLY.

The Springfield Republican is emphatically a newspaper for the people. It publishes all the news that is news in the broadest and highest sense, unaffected by partisan or personal prejudice. It is enterprising, alert and intelligent in the performance of its duties to the public. It has its own decided opinions on public questions, and these opinions are expressed with vigor and ability, but they are not allowed to color its news columns. The Republican is a thoroughly fair journal. Members of all parties who desire to keep informed of the important political events and discussions of the presidential campaign of 1892 should subscribe for The Republican.

The Daily Republican

Was started in 1844, and is the oldest daily paper in the state outside of Boston. It has always kept abreast of the times, and has been quick to avail itself of the best modern appliances for the enlargement and improvement of its news service. It is now regularly an eight-page sheet with seven wide columns to the page, and supplemental pages are frequently added as the demands of news or advertising require. It covers the news of the world with discriminating care and thoroughness, New England happenings and interests receive special attention and liberal space, and a large force of special reporters and correspondents are constantly employed in gathering the local news of Western Massachusetts and the neighboring counties of Connecticut, Vermont and New Hampshire for its readers. Its editorial page broad in range, independent, elevating and interesting in quality. Its literary department is of a remarkably high order. Its political correspondence is furnished by independent, well-informed and capable writers. It publishes, moreover, a great variety of interesting and valuable general correspondence and selections.

The Sunday Republican was published in 1878 in response to a real public demand in Western Massachusetts for a first-class, high-toned Sunday newspaper. Since that time it has been twice enlarged. Fully four-fifths of its 56 columns of space is devoted to reading matter of a high order, embracing news, special correspondence, a full page of editorial matter, a department of books, authors and art, a first-rate weekly story and a weekly sermon, sporting and theatrical news and notes, special articles, original and selected poetry etc. The Sunday Republican is a thoroughly wholesome, excellent and interesting journal, well adapted to the tastes and wants of the intelligent New England public.

The Weekly Republican is now more than 67 years old, but age only improves its quality. It continues to be what it has long been, a remarkably faithful and comprehensive record of American life. Its weekly review of the news is very carefully compiled, and its 12 broad pages contain in addition to the news, a wonderfully rich collection of valuable and entertaining reading matter. All the best features of the Daily and Sunday Republican are reproduced in The Weekly in full or but slightly abridged, and arranged with admirable skill and intelligence for the convenience and pleasure of the reader. The result is a weekly news and family journal which far exceeds in interest and worth any similar publication in the United States. It is a paper that New Englanders at home and abroad will find of special value, and which Americans everywhere can appreciate and enjoy.

Subscription Rates. DAILY: 70 cents a month, $2 a quarter, $8 a year. SUNDAY: 50 cents a quarter, $2 a year. All subscriptions are payable strictly in advance. Specimen copies free. Free For One Month. The Weekly Republican, a 12 page paper will be sent free for one month, to any one who wishes to try it. New subscribers to The Weekly for 1892 can have the paper free for the balance of 1891.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

The Story of a Vivandiere.

Mlle. Louise de Beaulieu has been permitted to sell matches in the streets of Paris because she lost her arm by a gun-shot wound in 1870 and has been decorated with the military medal and eight other medals for saving life by her intrepidity and heroism. She is 50 years of age, and she has earned a living by calling marketmen up at early morning hours in the neighborhood where she dwelt.

More than twenty years ago she joined a regiment as a vivandiere, and she was in eight battles. Once she was held as a spy at St. Dennis and sentenced to be shot. She refused to have her eyes bandaged, and asked to be allowed to give the command to fire. An officer who admired her pluck saved her life. In one of the battles she attended to twenty-five wounded men, and she lost her arm at Champigny while carrying a soldier to an ambulance, after her return from the battlefields she saved a child from the sixth story of a burning building in Paris.

Her Bargain.

The following true story is told in the "Journal of Emily Shore": A little girl near us was one day playing before the house, when a woman appeared and begged a few pence. She had a baby in her arms. And the child was so delighted with the little thing that she asked the woman if she would sell it to her.

"What will you give for it, miss?" was the counter question. "Half a crown."

"Very well," said the woman; "let's see the money." It was produced, and the sale made. The little girl took the baby, carried it up stairs and laid it on her bed, and after she had fondled it "enough for once," scampered down stairs, calling to her mother.

"Mamma, mamma! I've got a live doll! I always wanted one, and now I've got it."

The baby was found, and the story frankly told, but though the beggar woman was sought all over the town, no trace of her could be discovered. Meanwhile the baby's little "owner" begged so hard that it should be kept that the parents yielded, and the living doll became a household blessing.

Advice to Young Authors.

Get originally into your work, my friend. If your forte is writing articles choose a new, bright, popular topic and treat it freshly. Don't affect the dull and stupid essay style. Use few words. Make your sentences brief. Be crisp and make your thoughts crackle. Tell the public something it doesn't know and is trying to find out. If you lean to fiction tear away from old plots and take an incident that a reader will recognize at once as being fresh. Make your dialogue natural and bright; let your characters move around and have a being. Stop when your story is told; a lively story of 2,000 words, full of life and snap, has in it more prospects of success than a drawn out tale of 5,000 words. If you feel poetry to be your forte appeal to the heart rather than the mind. Don't fail at blank verse when you can succeed at popular poetry.—E. W. Bok in Ladies' Home Journal.

Chinese Children.

The Chinese give their boy babies a name in addition to their surnames, and they must call themselves by these names until they are twenty years old. At that age the father gives his son a new name.

The Chinese care so little for their girl babies that they do not give them a baby name, but just call them No. 1 No. 2, No. 3, according to their birth.

Boys are thought so much more of in China than girls are, that if you ask a Chinese father who has both a boy and a girl how many children he has, he will always reply, "Only one child."—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

It is not so hard as is supposed to pronounce the name of the queen of the Sandwich Islands. That "u" in Liliuokalani has the value of a "w," and if one says "Lileewoka-lanny" he will hit it about right.

The attention of our readers is directed to the announcement of the old reliable fur house of Edward Kakas & Sons of Boston. This firm is unquestionably the "leader" in its line in New England. Their furs are reliable both in quality and make up, and their prices reasonable.

Steamer 1 and Hose 1, with a detail of about twenty firemen, responded to a call from Lynn at 3 o'clock Sunday morning and covered Glenmere till the apparatus returned to that section of the city. The firemen were given a good breakfast by the Lynn department and returned to town about 9 A. M. It is now understood that the Peabody Department shall at once repair to Glenmere House in case of a relief call, and there await orders.

Samuel C. Larrabee has sold his barber shop in the Essex block to Frank D. Randall, who has been with W. A. Smith for a number of years. Mr. Larrabee will remain in the employ of Mr. Randall, and the shop which is one of the best appointed in the county will be conducted as heretofore.

John Marley appeared at the police station at 12 o'clock, Saturday night, with his face badly mutilated. He said that he had been assaulted at the corner of Oakland and Tremont streets after leaving an Essex car, and that one of his assailants had bitten him. He was sadly in need of a doctor's services. Marley would not complain of any one, and will probably get square in the old way.

John H. Drysdale was fined $5 in the police court Monday morning for disturbing the peace.

Clarence L. Beckett has bought the lot of land opposite the electric light station on Endicott street and has commenced the erection of a house thereon.

The cold weather the early part of the week brought the work on the electric power station to a standstill. Another week would have seen the big chimney finished.

Four men in the employ of the gypsy moth commission have been in town this week in search of nests, which are of the size and shape of half a peanut shell. They have the authority to enter anybody's premises. They will remain here until they find evidences of the moths, or until satisfied none exist if they do not discover any nests. If any should be found the men will return in the spring to prosecute the work of extermination.

The Essex Electric Street Railway time schedule was changed on Wednesday to half hour trips all day. But two cars remain on the line.

Henry O. Upton will open an afternoon dancing school for youngfolk, at Town Hall, Wednesday, Dec. 23.

Alfred W. Merrill died at his home on Washington street, last Tuesday, at the age of 68 years. He has been afflicted with paralysis a long time. The deceased was one of the original forty-niners and left Salem for California in the barque Le Grande at the time of the discovery of gold on the Pacific slope. He remained in California till 1865, when he became totally blind from the effects of the sun, while working on his land which he cultivated. He returned to Peabody, accompanied by his brother Charles, and has ever since resided with his brother Horace, who has taken care of him in his infirmity, his sight never having been recovered.

A long distance telephone was placed in J. B. Thomas' office Tuesday.

Two more truants were sent to Lawrence this week.

Mr. Thomas, proprietor and manager of the skating rink informs us that he will open the rink to private parties this winter, in response to requests of a number of parties.

An accident to the motive power of car number 15 on the Essex, occurred Wednesday evening while the car stood on the square, which delayed it for some time.

A regular communication of Jordan Lodge F. & A. M. will be held on Wednesday evening when the first degree will be worked. On Wednesday the 16th the officers for the ensuing year will probably be installed.

If you want Grant, McClellan, Sheridan or Sherman's memoirs—the original seven dollar edition for a song read our offer in the advertising columns.

Warren C. Osborne formerly of this town was united in marriage on Monday to Miss Nellie H., daughter of Capt. Daniel H. Lowe of Beverly. The ceremony was performed at Boston, by Rev. Henry P. Winter. Mr. Osborne is at present in the mail service at Boston.

Thomas Fallon made a daring attempt to stop a runaway horse belonging to C. H. Porter Wednesday evening, and after he had climbed into the wagon he could not get the dragging reins, and as the horse turned into Main street, from Peabody Institute hill, an electric car came rolling along, and thinking discretion the better part of valor, Mr. Fallon leaped out. He rolled all up in a heap on the ground but escaped injured. The horse kept on but did no material damage.

While Messrs Sherry and Butler were in Brighton, Wednesday looking for their stolen horses, and chief Peaseley, was in Boston for the same object, the missing property was recovered at the Gardner farm on Margin street, which is occupied by Dr. Woods. The horses were left there about 4 o'clock in the morning by two young men, who were said to come from the direction of Danvers. Officer Crowley learned of the facts and recovered the horses and buggy for their owners. It is rather a singular affair and it is supposed that the men intended to steal the horses, as they took two and led one behind the carriage, but it is thought they got frightened and abandoned their booty.

A man residing on Aborn street was fined $5 for slapping his wife's face yesterday.

The firm of Leighton & Wilson, sausage manufacturers, has been dissolved by the retirement of Mr. Leighton. The business will be continued by Mr. Wilson.

You can have the Grant, Sherman, Sheridan or McClellan Memoirs with the Cosmopolitan and the PEABODY PRESS for 1892, cash in advance, for $5.70. The regular price of the Grant Memoirs, everybody knows, is $7.00.

The illustrated poem to be given by the Brookside Club of South church, Tuesday evening, promises to be very entertaining and successful.

J. E. & J. H. Osborn will extend their currying business by the occupation of the shop at the corner of Spring street, formerly occupied by Lowd & Buxton, in addition to their present quarters.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the deceased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed condition you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed. Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free. F. J. CHENEY, & CO., Toledo, O. Sold by druggists, 75 cts.

Dean's Rheumatic Pills positively cure Rheumatism and Neuralgia. Entirely vegetable. Safe.

Assistant Chief Charles H. Hooper of the Fire Department is quite ill.

The barns of Thomas Sherry and Patrick Butler of Peabody were broken into on Tuesday night and a horse was stolen from each. Both horses were subsequently found at the Gardner farm, turned loose.

The members of the Second Congregational Church propose to give a reception on Wednesday evening to their pastor Rev. T. J. Kelly.

At the Unitarian Church tomorrow evening there will be services beginning at 7 o'clock.

Rev. Mr. Hudson will speak on the Poetry of the Old Testament, and there will be a special musical programme by the choir.

During the month of December, meeting will be held at St. Paul's church every Friday evening.

The W. C. T. W. will hold its annual meeting next Friday in Franklin Hall at 2.30 P. M. Miss Maud Sinclair will give a recitation entitled "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union."

The Ruthless Turk.

The Turk has been for centuries, says Alfred D. F. Hamlin writing in the December New England Magazine, the most ruthless of Vandals in classic lands, destroying the most precious antique monuments to obtain lime and mortar. Much havoc of this sort has been wrought in and about Stamboul, but wiser use has sometimes been made of ancient ruins. Wherever a bit of mediaeval wall could answer his purpose, he has made of it the basement of his house, thus subserving at once the interests of his purse and of the picturesque. The frowning machicolation of the old fortress become the windows of his kitchen and storeroom, and upon their crest his wooden walls perch in truly triumphant fashion. Part of the walls of old Byzantium are thus crowned with houses, and at Roumeli-Hissar beneath the windows of the American Robert College, a whole village clings to the scarps and towers of the frowning "Castle of Oblivion." No odder or more delightful confusion of beetling walls and comical houses could be imagined. The tops of the thick wall form lanes and alley-ways, leading down from level to level by steep inclines or crumbling steps. The crow's nest houses stand at every possible angle and elevation, overhanging the abyss on the further side of their lofty foundations, and gay with all the hues of the spectrum.

A Turkish Kitchen.

A stone-flagged floor, one or two tables, and rush-seated stools, a marble fountain and across the whole end of the room a cavernous arch, gathering up the smoke of a half-dozen tiny charcoal fires,—these are what one sees in a Turkish kitchen. The great arch and the stone bench or ledge under it, with its minute fireplaces heating its kettle or stewpan, forms the ojak or range, and is equipped at one end with a copper cauldron and at the other with a brick oven. Around the walls hang an imposing array of shining copper saucepans, and sometimes there stands in the corner a huge terra cotta amphora of antique pattern, to serve as water-cooler when the cistern is low or the aqueduct runs dry. In this primitive atelier, the turbaned chief fanning the microscopic fireplaces with a turkey's tail or damping them with ashes to keep the stew at a gentle simmer, concocts his savory chorbas, his toothsome pilafs and well-seasoned dolmas, with results which no epicure ventures to despise.—From "Pen Pictures of the Bosphorus" by Alfred D. F. Hamlin, in New England Magazine for December.

D. 1889, and recorded with an Essex Deeds, Southern District, Book 1102, Leaf 156, and assigned to John C. Campbell, November 17th, 1891, and for breach of the condition of said mortgage deed, will be sold at public auction, on the first parcel of land hereinafter described, on the twenty-first day of December, A. D. 1891, at two of the clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises described in said deed, to wit:—

A certain parcel of land situated in Peabody, Massachusetts, bounded as follows: viz., beginning at the corner of land, lately conveyed by Martha S. Putnam to the Town of Peabody and the lane which runs westerly from Andover street, near Fulton's corner; thence running south easterly by said land of the Town of Peabody, two hundred and fifty-eight (258) feet, to a cherry tree by land now or formerly of heirs of M. Wilson; thence by said Wilson's land, to land late of Stephen N. Proctor and land now or late of Moses Preston in different courses to said lane, thence north easterly by said lane to the point began at, containing about two and one half acres.

Also another parcel of land in said Peabody bounded as follows viz: beginning at a point on Prospect street one hundred and twenty feet distant, south westerly as the wall stands from the burying ground, thence running by said street and wall, northeasterly to the burying ground, thence northwesterly by the walls as they stand by said burying ground, by land now or formerly of Felton, and land now or formerly of Elijah Wilson, six hundred and forty-two feet, and eleven inches to land now or formerly of heirs of M. Wilson; thence south westerly by land of said heirs one hundred and forty-one feet by the wall as it now stands; thence south of easterly in a direct line by land formerly of Richard S. Rogers five hundred and eighty-two feet and two inches to the point began at, containing about one acre, three rods and thirty-eight and one half rods. Said premises are sold subject to the agreement between John Ray and Daniel Kilcommons recorded with Essex County Deeds, Southern District, Book 397, Leaf 133, and to a mortgage to Martha I. Putnam, the consideration of which is One Thousand and Fifty Dollars.

JOHN C. CAMPBELL,

Assignee of Mortgagee.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE.

By virtue of the power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by SIDNEY C. BANCROFT and MARY G. BANCROFT, both of Peabody in the County of Essex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts to CHARLES S. NICHOLS of Salem in said County, dated March 14, 1879, and recorded with the Deeds of said County (South District), Book 1015, Leaf 18 and for breach of condition of said mortgage will be sold at public auction, at the office of F. E. Farnham, 8 Allen's Block, Peabody Square, on Monday, the twenty-first day of December, A. D. 1891, at three o'clock in the afternoon. All and singular the premises conveyed by said mortgage, viz., A certain piece of land with the dwelling house thereon, bounded northerly by land formerly of S. C. Bancroft, Easterly on land of Patrick Murphy (being the same land described in deed of John Mahoney) the westerly line bounding on land formerly of S. C. Bancroft and the southerly line on Goodridge street, so called. Said deed of John Mahoney is dated June 1, 1860, and recorded in Book 609, Leaf 297, Essex Registry, Southern District.

Also, a lot of land on the northeasterly side of a way called Granite street, leading southeasterly from Washington street, bounded thus: viz., Southerly by land of Elijah W. Upton, southwesterly by said Granite street about 332 feet, northwesterly partly by land formerly of Thomas Hunt, and partly by land of Putnam, northeasterly by the Herriek Swamp 360 feet as the walls and fences about said lot now stand.

Also, at the same time and place, by virtue of the power of sale contained in certain mortgage deed given by Sidney C. Bancroft to Charles S. Nichols dated Aug. 19, 1873, and recorded in the deeds of said county, Book 889, Leaf 3, and for breach of condition of said mortgage, the premises therein conveyed, viz., a certain parcel of land with a dwelling house thereon, situated on High street, in said Peabody and bounded and described as set out in said Records. Also the real estate described in deed of A. W. Forniss to said Charles S. Nichols recorded in said Registry, Book 640, Leaf 223 in the judgment of partition recorded in the clerk's office of the superior court, for the County of Essex in the case of Charles S. Nichols vs. Edward Forniss et al., entered in 1862, Terms at Sale.

How He Beat the Barber.

A spruce looking young man entered a down town barber shop and, seating himself in the barber's chair, was speedily enjoying the luxury of a hair cut and shave. After his mustache had been curled to the young man's satisfaction, he got out of the chair, put on his hat and coat, and taking from his pocket
what the barber supposed was a twenty-five cent piece, turned around to the barber and insisted that he should go out and have a drink with him, as he wished in that way to show his appreciation of the artistic manner in which the tonsorial artist had manipulated him. The barber firmly but courteously declined the invitation, saying he never drank during business hours.

"But," said the young man, "you have given me the best hair cut and shave I have enjoyed in a good while, and I insist upon your going out and having a drink with me for friendship's sake, as I cannot think of leaving without expressing in this manner my esteem for your excellent workmanship."

The barber was a little nettled by this time and replied brusquely:

"I told you I never drank with any one during business hours, through friendship or for any other reason. Don't you see the gentleman who is waiting?
Next!"

"Well, I call this a downright insult," said the spruce looking young man, "and I shall never patronize you again.
There's your money," and throwing the coin over in the corner of the room, he hastily left the shop and disappeared around the corner. The barber, not suspecting anything wrong, finished shaving the next man, and then, going over to the corner for the money, found a cent.—New York Tribune.

As the sun is superior to the stars, so DANA'S is superior to all other Sarsaparillas.

An Advantage in Location.

"The privileges you enjoy, my son,
from being an American," said the proud father, "are simply inestimable. You may some day become president of the United States, while in England no little boy, however brilliant or good, can ever become queen."—Harper's Bazar.

At Last.

The long expected illustrated History of Utah by the eminent historian,
Hubert H. Bancroft, has at last
appeared. It is absolutely a revelation.
After visiting the field in person, taking
testimony impartially from all sides,
critically reviewing the enormous
number of 1000 different authorities,
and searching many of the secret
archives of the Mormon Church, Mr.
Bancroft now gives to the World this
wonderful and remarkable work the only
true history of Mormonism published.

The work reads like a romance—the
wonderful adventures of trappers and
travelers, the bloody Indian wars, the
thrilling accounts of massacres, and
miraculous escapes, the famous Danite
Association or Destroying Angles, the story of Brigham Young—all this fresh
from the pen of the brilliant and gifted
author forms a narrative of exciting
interest, as fascinating as a novel yet
true to the letter. Above all in surpassing interest is the unfolding of the
great Mormon question and the mysteries of Polygram, which will be read with eager interest by all classes
of people throughout the English
speaking world. The work is published in one large handsome volume
of 800 pages, bound in red and gold,
and grandly illustrated with steel-plate
portraits of the great Mormon leaders,
exquisite half-tone engravings and
dazzling colored plates. It is issued by the great Publishing House of the Pacific Coast—The History Company
of San Francisco, and can only be procured through their authorized agents.
We call attention to the advertisement

AN OLD TIME THEATER.

AT "THE GRAND DUKE" MANY BRIGHT ACTORS GOT A START.

Newsboy and Bootblack Vaudevilles Who Once Made a New Sight for New Yorkers—Most of Them Have Flourished and Some Are Famous in a Way.

Two decades ago the Grand Duke theater, or newsboys' playhouse, was one of the most famous institutions of this metropolis. Today the projector and chief manager of this unique resort runs an express team from a stand in the New Bowery. His name is Richard Burke.
Dick Burke is not a large man physically, but he is a person of acute mental development. He is, as were all the leading newsboy players connected with the original Grand Duke theater, a typical New Yorker. He was born in the "Fort" ward, and he knows about every inch of Manhattan island. He sold newspapers as early as he was able to walk, and there never was a thing in or about
New York that Dick didn't know.

Now that all the boys of that time are grown to manhood, and many of them are firmly fixed in the real theatrical world, the story that Richard Burke can tell of the old days in the cellar at 21
Baxter street has a peculiar interest.
That cellar was a spacious affair, as cellars go nowadays. It was entered by a flat door, which opened from the street.
One dived down into this thespian home instead of climbing upward. The furnishings were primitive in the extreme.
There was not even a raised stage. The boy actors played their parts on the same floor from which the spectators applauded.

About the only accessory that the cellar boasted was a curtain of bedticking, which hid the players from the people.
There were about seven boys in the original Grand Duke company, headed by Teddy Sullivan and Dick Burke.
They had no paid tutors. Schools of acting did not flourish then. As Burke explains, "They went to the real theaters and caught onto their pieces."

WHERE THEY PLAYED.

They played mainly negro sketches in that old cellar at the corner of Baxter and Worth streets, and many of the "kids" played better than they knew,
for nearly all of them have since distinguished themselves before the public on the professional stage. It was a time ripe for such an innovation. There was a chivalric spirit abroad in the breasts of the youth of the land which made deeds of heroic strength and valor rank high. Ned Buntline was recounting the deeds of Buffalo Bill in the New York Weekly. Leon Lewis was writing of the adventures of daring youths in The Ledger. Everywhere bravery showed its front. It was not unnatural, therefore, that these New York newsboys should strive to do and dare for themselves, and, adopting the buskin, cleave their own career in the face of many difficulties.

They were strong, healthy, sensible boys, and they knew that in minstrelsy they had their forte. That they did not aspire to the higher distinction of playing Shakespearean parts only emphasizes their good sense. So they played in black faces, and those famous old time sketches, "Beasley's Dog" and "The Coming Man," figured conspicuously in their repertory. The elite as well as the ragtag and bobtail of the town dived down into the dingy cellar to witness the antics of the merry lads. The Grand Duke Alexis, on his memorable visit to America, was a distinguished auditor one night. In fact, the theater afterward had its best known title from this august potentate, who smiled and paid for his fun at the newsboys' theater.

There was one typical episode in the career of this juvenile lyceum to which
Mr. Burke still refers with pleasure.
About the time that the boys' theater was in progress James Gordon Bennett was organizing soup-houses throughout the city. One night a swell party entered the cellar. Among the visitors was Tony Pastor. Each person put down a dollar for his entrance fee.

ACTING FOR CHARITY.

The soup-house business was uppermost in everybody's mind, and Pastor had recently created a fund for its support. J. J. McCloskey, the playwright and then actor, was one of the party.
What did he do but spring up in the middle of the performance and make a ringing speech calling upon those present to contribute to the soup fund.

Dave Conroy, one of the boy players, leaped to his feet and declared that the Grand Duke company would give an entertainment to help the cause. Others of the boys seconded the motion, and it was carried amid enthusiasm.

On a later night a special programme was arranged, the soup-house benefit was given and $156 was realized, which was handed over to Mr. Bennett. This was succeeded by other entertainments of a charitable nature, heartily entered into by the Grand Duke boys, until their theater gained a wide reputation, not only for its uniqueness, but for the practical good it was doing. But all this couldn't last. The boys grew to manhood and the things of the old time were swept away. Teddy Sullivan was drowned at the Fulton street ferry three or four years ago. Two others of the Grand Duke actors are now robust and popular policemen. Sam Bernard is a variety agent, and has made money and reputation also as a Dutch comedian.
Jack Conway is of the vaudeville firm of Conway and Dempsey. Michael Coyne is a partner in the "teams" of Sheehan and Coyne, and the two seldom work for less than $200 a week. Dave Conroy and Jack Dailey are of the funny Four Shamrocks, who are also very well paid.

Senator Stanford Wanted to Expel 200.

Stories are already beginning to come from Leland Stanford, Jr., university, at Palo Alto. Last week about 200 students let off the brakes of a flat car
which was standing near the university,
and many of them got aboard and started down grade toward the station. In a short time the car was spinning along at a lively rate, and the lads did not stop it until it had reached Palo Alto. The car was missing the following morning, and a special engine had to be sent from San Jose to haul it back.

Senator Stanford was wrathful when he heard of the incident, and proposed to expel the ringleaders. It was discovered that there were fully 200 boys engaged in the affair, and the senator gave orders
that they should all be required to leave.
The order would probably have been enforced but for Mrs. Stanford. She interceded for the youngsters, and excused them by saying that it was only a boyish prank. She finally succeeded in inducing Stanford to change his resolution.—Cor.

THE GREATEST STRIKE.

Among the great strikes that of Dr.
Miles in discovering his New Heart Cure has proven itself to be one of the most important. The demand for it has become astonishing. Already the treatment of heart disease is being revolutionized, and many unexpected cures effected. It soon relieves short breath, fluttering, pains in side, arm, shoulder, weak and hungry spells, oppression, swelling of ankles, smothering and heart dropsy. Dr. Miles' book on Heart and Nervous Diseases free. The unequalled
New Heart Cure is sold and guaranteed by William T. Lee, also his Restorative Nervine for headache, fits, sprees, hot flashes, nervous chills, opium habit, etc.

A Burglar Captured.

This morning about two o'clock, John Wood, the well-known plumber who resides on Main Street, was awakened by hearing glass break. On getting out of bed he received a blow on the head.
He immediately grappled with the burglar, and after a terrible struggle succeeded in holding him until his wife obtained help. On being searched at the station, Mr. Wood's watch and wallet was found on his person. He gave the name of Robert Terry. The broken glass proved to be a bottle of Sulphur Bitters which had almost cured Mrs.
Wood of rheumatism.—Exchange.

Effie—I wish you would flirt with me.
Gawgie—Why? Effie—I would like to find out whether my fiancé would get angry enough to knock you down for it.

Happy Hoosiers.

Wm. Timmons, postmaster of Idaville,
Ind., writes: Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feeling arising from Kidney and Liver trouble. John Leslie, farmer and stockman, of same place, says: Find Electric Bitters to be the best Kidney and Liver medicine, made me feel like a new man. J. W.
Gardner, hardware merchant, same town,
says: Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't care whether he lives or dies; he found new strength, good appetite and felt just like he had a new lease on life. Only 50 cents a bottle, at Wm. T. Lee's drug store.

Maud—Your chaperone seems very angry at you. Mamie—Yes. I haven't left her alone long enough this evening to give her a chance to flirt.

Prevention is Better

Than cure, and those who are subject to rheumatism can prevent attacks by keeping the blood pure and free from acid which causes the disease. For this purpose Hood's Sarsaparilla is used by thousands with great success. It is the best blood purifier.

Constipation is caused by loss of peristaltic action of the bowels. Hood's Pills restore this action and invigorate the liver.

Bimly—The doctors have given the poor fellow up. Jimly—Is his case so desperate as that? Bimly—Yes. He has no more money.

The Witty Irishman.

when told by a doctor that his liver was almost gone, said, "Faith! it's gald I am, it's allers bothered me!"

The liver, more than any other organ, is the index of the body. With a morbid liver the whole system is out of gear! Most powerful for the restoration of this "citadel of health," is Dr.
Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.
Its action is direct, prompt, effectual!
Recommended by eminent physicians it has gained a universal reputation as the "Great Liver Regulator." Correct the liver, and you cure many ills! The "Golden Medical Discovery," is warranted in all cases of liver diseases and blood disorders to benefit or cure, or money promptly and cheerfully returned.

A-head of everything that can be used for washing work is light, it is a luxury.

It lessens the labor of washing, and helps every-

A house without Pearlina is "behind the times."

Feddiers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this

"Penny wise and Pound foolish" are those who think it economy to use cheap rosin and soda soaps, or washing powders of any kind, instead of the good old Dobbins' Electric Soap; for sale by all grocers since 1869,
and used during all that time
by millions of intelligent economical women who know its merits, and therefore use it. All who use it praise it as the best,
cheapest; and most economical
soap made, but if you will try it, even just once, it will tell a much stronger tale of its merits itself. Ask your grocer for Dobbins' Electric Soap, take nothing else.

The Use of the Voice.
Among the small things, as generally considered, but great ones as I look at them, is the use of the voice. Here is a sample of a very common conversation,
such as we hear in many homes: "Maria,
did you tell Tom to go for the milk?"
"Heh?" "Did you tell Tom what I said?"
"What did you tell me to tell him?" "To go for the milk." No reply. Then comes the question again, "Maria, will you tell me if you sent Tom?" "Yes, I did." Here is a great waste of both time and strength, and generally of patience as well. The habit with many people is very persistent not to answer directly,
but to first compel a repetition of a question or a remark. In the course of a year such duplicate remarks, if put together, would make a large volume.
The habit should be formed of careful listening and direct responding. Some persons respond indirectly in order to gain time. They are made up with a lack of straightforwardness. They never wish to commit themselves promptly;
but most persons who indulge the habit are simply heedless and indifferent to others' rights. A few have preoccupied minds, and a question has to be repeated two or three times to get through the circumambient meditation. — Mary E.
Spencer in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Colors of Women.
Balzac, the French author, says that a woman's character finds expression in her favorite color. A woman who prefers orange or green gowns is, he thinks, quarrelsome. Those who sport yellow hats or who go clad in black without cause are not to be trusted. White should indicate coquetry. Gentle and thoughtful women prefer pink. Pearl gray is the color of women who consider themselves unfortunate. Lilac is the shade particularly affected by overpresented beauties; therefore lilac hats are mostly worn by mothers on their daughters' marriage day and by women more than forty years old when they go visiting. —

A GREAT MAGAZINE

The Century's Programme in 1892—A New "Life of Columbus"—Articles for Farmers, etc.

That great American periodical, THE CENTURY,
is going to outdo its own unrivaled record in its programme for 1892, and many of its new features begin with the November number. New readers should commence with this issue. The Century has in this number are the opening chapters of
"THE NAULAHKA,"

a novel by Rudyard Kipling, the famous author of "Plain Tales from the Hills," written in collaboration with an American writer, Wolcott Balestier. It is the story of a young man and a young woman who are "booming" Colorado town, who go to India
in search of a wonderful jeweled necklace, called "the Naulahka" (from which the story takes its name), and she as a physician to women. The novel describes their remarkable adventures at the court of an Indian maharajah. Besides this, THE CENTURY will print three other novels during the year, and a great number of short stories by the best American story writers.

The well-known humorist Edgar W. Nye ("Bill Nye") is to write a series of amusing sketches which he calls his "autobiographies."
The first one of which, "The Autobiography of a Justice of the Peace," is in November.
This number also contains a valuable and suggestive article on "The Food Supply of the Future," which every farmer should read to be followed by a number of others of GREAT PRACTICAL VALUE TO FARMERS,

treating especially of the relations of the Government to the farmer, what is done, and what it should do. This series will include contributions from officers of the Department of Agriculture, and from well-known men who discuss "The Farmer's Discontent," "Cooperation," etc., etc.

A celebrated Spanish writer is to furnish a "Life of Columbus," which will be illustrated, and the publishers of THE CENTURY have arranged with the managers of THE NEW YORK World's Fair to print articles of the buildings.

A STORY OF NEW YORK LIFE

by the author of "The Angeliomania," and the magazine will contain a great deal about the metropolis during the year,—among other things a series of illustrated articles on "The Jews in New York." In November is an illustrated description of "The Players' Club," founded by Edwin Booth, and one of the features of the splendid illustrated
Christmas (December) number is an article on "The Bowery."

scription price ($5.00) to THE CENTURY CO.,

"THE BEST OF CHILDREN'S MAGAZINES."
The publishers of ST. NICHOLAS, that famous young folks' magazine, are offering to send a sample copy, free of charge, to any father or mother who would like to consider the question of taking a children's magazine
during the year to come.
Certainly if that question is up for discussion in any household ST. NICHOLAS will be the magazine selected. From its first number, in 1873, it has been the greatest writers of the English world, and the pencils of the most famous illustrators, have been at its service. Tennyson, Longfellow, Bryant, Whitney, Hughes, and others, have written for it. Taylor, Mrs. Burnett, Miss Alcott, Donald G.
Mitchell, George MacDonald, Mrs. Oliphant, professor Proctor are a few of the many great names which have been upon its list of contributors. Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge is the editor. Everything in it is illustrated.

In 1892
there are to be serial stories by Brander
Matthews, Lieutenant Robert H. Fletcher
(the author of that charming book, "Marjorie and Her Papa"), Laura E. Richards, William O. Stoddard, Charles E. Carrell (the author of "Davy and the Goblin"), and Frances Courtney Bayly. There will be short stories by Thomas Nelson Page, Mary E. Wilkins, Mary
Hallowell Foote, Richard Malcolm Johnston, Octave Thanet, General O. O. Howard, and many others, with papers of travel and adventure by J. T. Trowbridge and Lieutenant Schwartzka, and useful articles on "How to travel," "Volcanoes," and "Earthquakes."
"Straight Lines and Circles," etc. In "Strange Corners of our Country," the Great American Desert, the Cliff Dwellings of Arizona, and other interesting places, will be described,
and in "Honors to the Flag" and "Boys and the National Guard," the patriotism of the young readers will be aroused and stimulated.
Julian Ralph is to describe "The Making of a Great Newspaper," and the arc and incandescent electric lights are to be clearly explained.

APPLIED CHRISTIANITY
is what ST. NICHOLAS teaches,—unselfishness, faithfulness, courage, truthfulness—these things are taught in a hundred ways by stories, poems and pictures. Do you need such an assistant in your work with your boys and girls? If so, and if you are already familiar with ST. NICHOLAS, send a postal card to The Century Co., Union Square,
New York, N. Y., and ask to see a sample copy. A year's subscription to ST. NICHOLAS makes a splendid Christmas present, for it brings Christmas twelve times a year.

A SONG OF THE SEA.

Come out where the billows are cool and deep,
Where the waves never rest and the winds
Where plumed steeds course the ocean's breast,
Each flaunting a pennant of foam at his crest;
Where the zephyrs are practiced to try their wings,
And the sea mew shrieks and the mermaid
sings—
When the moon is low, and, with shudder and sigh,
The tides are turned 'neath her watchful eye!
Come down on the sands where the plaintive
snipe
Thrills a memory of Pan and his reedy pipe,
Where the ripples that lap on the shelving beach
Seem to welcome a continent to their reach;
Where the great brown rocks in their trailing weeds
Seem doing penance for guilty deeds
Centuries since, when the pirate's sail
Drove a bark to seek help in the teeth of a gale.
Leave sorrow behind when you'd frolic with me,
For there's never a grief that can sadden the
sea.
And never a burden too heavy to throw Away to be lost in the ebb and flow;
Come down to the marge of the seething earth
And bathe in the surge, where Love had birth,
Where the fountain of youth in a crystal cave Plays, hidden for aye, 'neath a laughing wave.
—New York World.

Trains Ahead of Time.

A gentleman from the vicinity of the Blarney stone tramped into the depot
for the seventh time a day or two ago,
and, depositing a careworn satchel on the seat, waltzed up to the ticket office with blood in his eye and anger in his heart. He was so mad that at first he could not express himself except by uttering a Donnybrook "begorra."
"What is it?" queried the ticket agent.
"It's the seventh time."
"What's the seventh time?"
"The seventh time oive losht me train."
"How so?"
"That's what ye'll plaze explain, ye dude. I began losht trains at six o'clock this mornin and I've been losht in them ever since."
"Have you a watch?"
"None of your business."
"I only asked you, sir, to see if I could explain how you lost your train."
The Irishman pulled out a watch with a fryingpan case and showed it in a window with a "It's the best chronometer
in town."
"That's the reason why you lost your train."
"What dy'e say?"
"Why, your watch is seventeen minutes slow."
"Not by a good dale, begorra. Your trains are seventeen minutes too fast,"
and the man grabbed his watch, bolted
for his grip and left the station, shaking his head vigorously.—Albany Argus.

Apes in Borneo.

"My acquaintance with apes has been chiefly made in Borneo," said Professor Henry A. Ward, the famous natural science collector of Rochester. "That great island is the home of the orang,
which is the most arboreal of all monkeys. The animals live in trees altogether, rarely, if ever, visiting the ground. It takes two good marksmen to shoot one, because they dodge around the trunks. They do all their fighting aloft, and it is great fun to see them drop the armfuls of fruit they have gathered in contests for its possession.
They are plentiful in the lowlands near the coast.—Washington Star.

Guaranteed Cure.

this condition. If you are afflicted with a Cough, Cold or any Lung, Throat or Chest trouble, and will use
this remedy as directed, giving it a fair

King's New Discovery could be relied on. It never disappoints. Trial bottles free at Wm. T. Lee's Drug Store.

Mother Country.

The term mother country is used to signify one's native country, but the term applies especially to England, in relation to America and the colonies. The inhabitants of North America, Australia, etc., are for the most part descendants of English parents, and therefore England may be termed the mother country. The Germans call their native country fatherland.

DANA'S.

He Kept His Word.

"Oh, what do you think?" exclaimed
Miss Elder.
"Well?" replied Miss Flypp.
"Mr. Simcoe proposed to me last night."
"Did he? Well, when I refused him
the night before he threatened to do something desperate, but I didn't think he would be that rash."—New York

Killed by Kindness.

A lady was walking along the crowded streets of a city when she saw a small green bird flying wearily above the roar and din of traffic. It was so tired it gradually lessened its flight and soon fell at her feet at the curbstone.
It was some one's pet canary, escaped from its cage. The lady picked it up tenderly and carried it struggling and exhausted into a drug store, where she inquired if its owners were known. The drug store people did not know, and she borrowed a paper bag into which she carefully placed the bird. Then leaving her name and address she took the bird
with her and went on her way.
She walked some distance to call on some friends, and when she arrived at the house set the paper bag on a table and did not think of it until greetings were over. Then she called attention to her bird, but the little, bright plumaged thing lay dead, she having never once thought of the necessity of giving it air.
The closed paper bag had proved air tight, and the bird was literally killed
by kindness.—Detroit Free Press.

Pigmies vs. Giants.

Lilliputian as they are in size (being no larger than mustard seeds,) they achieve results that their Brobdingnagian opponents utterly fall in. We refer to the efficacy of the powerful preparation known as Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, compared with that of their gigantic competitors, the old style pill. Try the little giants, when dyspepsia, liver complaint, constipation, biliousness, or any kindred ills assail
you, and you'll make no mistake—
they'll disappear at once.

Go tell it, ye breezes, from desert to
sea.
The "Prescription" has triumphed, fair
women is free!

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the one princely remedy above all others! Made expressly for women, it is adapted to her special needs, and fulfills every requirement.
No condition so critical as to defy it!
No emergency so great as to baffle it!
As a woman restorative and regulator, the "Favorite Prescription" is master of the situation. Positively guaranteed to give satisfaction in all cases, or money paid for it returned.
The only medicine for women sold on trial.

This Boy Met a Bear.

Friday, as Charles Hoxie and T. W.
Ford were up in the woods near Ebene-lake, hunting, they separated to meet later, when Hoxie, who is about seventeen years old, came in contact with an old bear and two cubs, and they made for him. He, seeing it was useless to run, stood his ground and discharged his rifle, killing the old bear at the first shot. Then with two shots more he killed one of the cubs, the other getting away. Pretty good for a boy all alone in the woods.—Oranville Cor. Dexter (Me.) Gazette.

"Who said Hood's Sarsaparilla? Thousands of people, who know it to be the best blood purifier and tonic medicine."

An Original Scheme.

Captain J. S. Dunham, a vesselman on the great lakes, has presented a scheme
by which the waters of the great inland seas will be prevented from continuing to lower as they are reported to be doing.
His plan is a very simple one. In the Niagara river below Tonawanda, where navigation ends, he would dump many thousand boat loads of large stones. It might be that some steel structure could also be extended into the river from each side to narrow the channel. The result would be to lessen the flow of water from the lakes and thereby increase the stage of water at all points. The proposed dam would be comparatively inexpensive. The question is largely an engineering one.—Toronto Globe.

Sulphur Bitters saved my life. For ten years I suffered from catarrh and liver complaint; I lost forty-five pounds and was growing worse rapidly. I lost all faith in medicine, but hearing your Bitters so well recommended, I gave them
a trial. Six bottles cured me.—Smith P.

What is

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhoea and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

Dr. G. C. Osmond,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

Dr. J. F. KINCHLOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

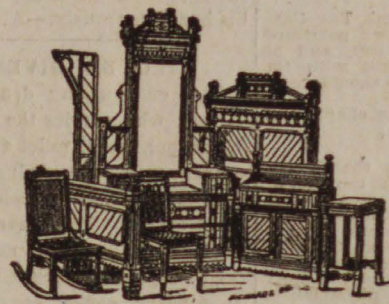

H. A. Archer, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL

COLUMBIA THEATRE.

Direct from a four months' run at Madison Square Theatre, New York, comes "Jane," which will be seen here next Monday evening at the Columbia. The amusement goers of Boston are particularly interested in this theatrical event. "Jane" is the comedy taken from the French, then from the English, which has set all New York laughing, and the author adapted the play for American audiences. When it was first produced even the critics laughed, but of course they had to frown at the same time, so they said "we have seen many of the incidents in other comedies." They told the truth, half a dozen comedies have been taken from the same source, but not one of them says who have seen the play, can rival "Jane" either in the brightness of its dialogue or in the skillful cleverness of its complicated situation. Even during the hot nights of last summer fashionable audiences went to see the comedy, and any entertainment less interesting would have been decidedly depressing to the auditor.

Boston society appreciating the of attraction is already talking of the coming play and the demand for seats has been unusually large. The company which Mr. Chas. Frohman has selected, is one of the strongest under his enterprising management. It includes Miss Johnstone Bennett, one of the best of individual character actresses; Paul Arthur, the bright comedian so long with Nat Goodwin; R. F. Cotton, M. C. Daly, Maggie Holloway, Amelia Somerville, Elene Ellison, E. Schnitz Edwards, Master Joseph Totten.

"Jane" has just finished one of the most successful engagements known at the Columbia Theatre, Chicago, and indeed its entire road town has been identified with prosperity. In Baltimore and Pittsburgh theatre parties were a feature each evening during the engagement. The performances will be given here with the same carefulness that marked the presentation at the Madison Square Theatre. "The Better Part," a one act drama of much pathetic force, will be presented in connection with the comedy, and the performance begins promptly at 8 o'clock.

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE

A new play by Victorien Sardou is always an event of importance, in both dramatic and literary sense, and when the famous author of "Fidra," "La Tosca" and "Theodora" offers a new play for the judgement of the public, the artistic world of two hemispheres awaits the outcome with bated breath. In Paris the Ministry ordered the withdrawal of "Thermidor" after its second performance. This, as Sardou explained in a letter to Mr. Charles Frohman, was because he "did not respect the guillotine." In America the great French author received fair play. Charles Frohman produced his drama in superb style, and it ran to crowded houses for eight weeks. Mr. Frohman's production at the Hollis Street Theatre on Monday will be identical with that given in New York. The cast numbers twenty-six speaking parts the leading role being assumed by Frederic de Belleville, Frederick Bond and Elsie de Wolfe. Elaborate scenery will be used, and there will be a large force of trained supernumeraries. The story of "Thermidor" is most absorbing, and is told as only Sardou knows how to tell it.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

"A Pair of Kids," one of the brightest of the few of innumerable farce comedies on the stage, will be the attraction at the Opera House commencing Monday. Ezra Kendall, the author of this funny play, in his familiar character of "Jiles Button," the old country "jay" is said to be very amusing, and other theatre goers will have an opportunity to laugh at his grotesque antics to their hearts content. This well known laughing success is now in its seventh season.

BOSTON THEATRE.

Next week is the last of the engagement at Boston Theatre, of the Minnie Hank opera company. Tomorrow evening a grand sacred concert will be given.

TREMONT THEATRE.

The third Philharmonic concert will be given on Thursday at 2 P. M.

On the estate of the Marquis de la Laguna in Spain a water wheel of 20 horse power runs a dynamo. Ploughing by electricity has been proposed, and the current is to be transmitted to a field three miles distant, where a motor on a plough is to be operated. The cable to be attached to the plough is to be wound on a reel and drawn over the field.

Prof. Holman of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology has invented an improvement in the manufacture of insulated wire. He braids the wire with regular braiding so as to have an air space, air being one of the best insulators. His method is being thoroughly tested.

Of the students in Sibley College, Cornell University, about one-half are taking the course of electrical engineering, while the majority of the other half are taking the course of mechanical engineering.

Another Play House For Boston

Messrs Harris & Atkinson the enterprising managers and proprietors of the Columbia Theatre will open an elegant new theatre in Bowdoin square and Court street, under the name of Bowdoin Square Theatre, about the 15th of February. The seating capacity will be 1500 and the class of attraction will be the same as those engaged by the regular houses of Boston. The proximity to the Northern and Eastern depots will make the house a favorite resort for people of this vicinity.

The PRESS will publish a full description of the building with plans elevations etc as soon as the drawings for illustration are completed by the architects.

Was It an Amesbury Man?

The story goes that the poet Whitier once lent a volume of Plato to a neighboring farmer, and, when the book was returned, asked, "Well, friend, how did thee like Plato?" "First rate," said the farmer; "I see he's got some of my ideas."—Newburyport News.

Amesbury's Opinion.

The prevailing opinion in Amesbury is that Senator Brickett owes his defeat to the lack of harmony in the Democratic party there and the personal popularity of Senator-elect Shaw. Mr. Allen received 159 plurality there over Governor Russell, while Mr. Shaw received 293 plurality over Senator Brickett.—Exchange.

Veteran Conductor Dead.

David Nason of Salem, for 50 years an employe on the old Eastern and Boston & Maine railroad, most of the time conductor of a passenger train, died Thursday afternoon. He retired from service in 1888.

For a quarter of a century he was conductor of a train on the Lawrence branch, and will be kindly remembered by a large circle of acquaintances made during his long service. He was particularly familiar to Peabody patrons of the road.

Royal Arch Masons.

Fifty-nine of the 72 subordinate royal arch chapters of Freemasons were represented by about 250 members at the annual convocation of the grand royal arch chapter of Massachusetts, held at Masonic Temple in Boston Tuesday. J. Alfred Blake was elected most excellent high priest.

The Columbia Daily Calendar.

An old friend in a new dress, and an article that has to be one of the indispensables of an editor's desk, comes to hand in the Columbia Daily Calendar for 1892. The Calendar is in the form of a pad containing 367 leaves, each 5 1-8x2 5-8 inches; one for each day of the year, to be removed daily, and one for the entire year. The day of the week, of the month, and of the year are given, and each slip bears a short paragraph pertaining to cycling or some kindred subject. At the bottom of each leaf is a blank for memoranda, every leaf being accessible at any time. The stand is an entirely new departure being made of sheet metal finished in ivory black, and is very compact. At the close of the year the stand will be available for another pad. This is the seventh issue of this now well-known Calendar, yet all the matter is fresh and new, having been carefully collated from leading publications and prominent writers, most of it being specially written for this purpose. It comprises notable events in cycling, opinions of physicians and clergymen, hints about road making, and numerous other topics.

Nobody Interested

The legislature of 1891 directed the railroad commissioners to inquire into the practice of the various railroads as to the number of brakemen employed on freight trains, with a view to making recommendations to the roads, and reporting to the next legislature. Therefore a public hearing was advertised for Tuesday morning, but no one seemed to be interested enough to appear.—Newburyport News

All Growing Fast

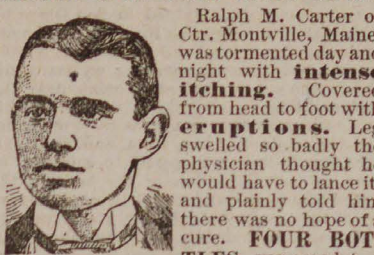

It is a close run for the second place in the A. O. U. W. that now exists between the jurisdictions of Missouri, Ontario and Massachusetts. Missuri still leads with 24,209, Massachusetts next with 24,105, followed by Ontario with 23,136. The gains last month were, Massachusetts, 26; Ont., 256; Missouri, 114.

Looking Forward

The charter of the Pawtucket, R. I., Street Railway Company is to be amended so that it will be required to pay the town $300 a year for its franchise.

Bowditch Court Extension.

A petition has been filed with the Selectmen, signed by a score or more of the residents of Central street, asking that a way be laid out in prolongation of Bowditch Court which will make a direct connection with Warren street. The petition is a repetition of what has been before the town several times. Once, about three years ago, the selectmen went over the ground and laid out a way which would probably have been adopted had it not been for the violent opposition of a single individual. There was no particular interest manifested, and no special reason for objection and it was solely for want of a friendly word of explanation that the location failed of adoption in the town meeting.

The road would be much more convenient now than ever before, on account of the primary school house being located on the line of the proposed thoroughfare. It would afford an easy passage to Andover and Endicott streets for the little ones.

A hearing has been assigned for next Friday evening.

The question of land damage has been removed since the case was before the town last, by the conveyance of the large field in rear of Bowditch school house to Samuel Trask and Mr. Osborn, who will contribute the land needed to help the scheme along.

Water Works Statistics.

The following reports show relatively, the difference between the pumping of the Peabody and Salem stations for the month of November, Mr. Pettay's report to the local board is as follows: "Gallons pumped, 22,986,683; average per day, 766,222; coal consumed, 57,940 pounds; average per day 1931; average running time, 8 hours 35 minutes per day"

While Mr. Dennett's report for the corresponding period shows that 70,899,200 gallons of water was used in Salem and the amount of coal used was 184,400 pounds.

It appears from the two reports that the proportion of coal consumed at the two stations was substantially the same, the slight difference being against Salem apparently; but details of conditions under which the two stations worked are wanting, making it impossible to determine whether there was any actual balance of economy of operation to be credited to either station or engineer.

It would be interesting and instructive to know more fully the details of operation in the various cities and towns where public water systems are in use, especially in this vicinity as the publication of such data would lead to minimum economy of operation in the towns paying most attention to the comparisons.

Obituary.

We regret to announce the sudden death this week of Col. Wm. Warland Clapp, who was until last summer, the managing editor of the Boston Journal. Deceased was born at Boston, April 11, 1826, and was a son of W. W. Clapp, founder of the Boston Advertiser.

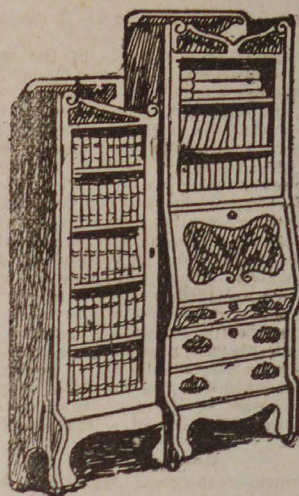

Mrs. Phoebe Upton Cross of West Peabody, one of the oldest residents of that village, passed away this week at the age of 88 years. Her father was Maj. Andrew Monroe of Revolutionary days. For about five years she has been an invalid, and for over a years her sight has failed her entirely.

One reason is people like to know what they are eating, and the composition of Cleveland's baking powder is given on every label.

So many baking powders containing ammonia or alum are widely advertised as "absolutely pure," the best way is to refuse any brand the composition of which is concealed.

PRESIDENT'S VIEWS

As Submitted to the Fifty-Second Congress.

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

The reports of the heads of the several executive departments, required by law, to be submitted to me, which are herewith transmitted, and the reports of the secretary of the treasury and the attorney-general, made directly to congress, furnish a comprehensive view of the administrative work of the last fiscal year relating to internal affairs. It would be of great advantage if these reports could have an attentive perusal by every member of congress and by all who take an interest in public affairs. Such a perusal could not fail to excite a higher appreciation of the vast labor and conscientious effort which are given to the conduct of our civil administration.

The reports will, I believe, show that every question has been approached, considered and decided from the standpoint of public duty and upon considerations affecting the public interests alone. Again I invite to every branch of the service the attention and scrutiny of congress.

Reciprocity.

The work of the state department during the last year has been characterized by an unusual number of important negotiations and by diplomatic results of a notable and highly beneficial character. Among those are the reciprocal trade arrangements which have been concluded, in the exercise of the powers conferred by chapter 3 of the tariff law, with the republic of Brazil, with Spain for its West India possessions, and with San Domingo. Like negotiations with other countries have been much advanced, and it is hoped that before the close of the year further definite trade arrangements of great value will be concluded.

The Seal Question.

In view of the reports which had been received as to the diminution of the seal herds in Behring sea, I deemed it wise to propose to her majesty's government in February last that an agreement for a closed season should be made, pending the negotiations for arbitration which then seemed to be approaching a favorable conclusion. After much correspondence, and delays for which this government was not responsible, an agreement was reached and signed on the 15th of June, by which Great Britain undertook, from that date and until May 1, 1892, to prohibit the killing by her subjects of seals in the Behring sea, and the government of the United States, during the same period, to enforce its existing prohibitions against pelagic sealing and to limit the catch by the fur seal company upon the islands to 7500 skins.

Concerning Boundaries.

Provision should be made for a joint demarcation of the frontier line between Canada and the United States, wherever required by the increasing border settlements, and especially for the exact location of the water boundary in the straits and rivers.

I should have been glad to announce some favorable disposition of the boundary dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela, touching the western frontier of British Guiana, but the friendly efforts of the United States in that direction have thus far been unavailing. This government will continue to express its concern at any appearance of foreign encroachment on territories long under the administrative control of American states.

The determination of a disputed boundary is easily attainable by amicable arbitration, where the rights of the respective parties rest, as here, on historic facts, readily ascertainable. The president here refers to the gratifying results of the labors of the state department and our ministers abroad in having the restrictions on American pork products removed in Germany, Denmark, Italy, Austria and France.

Brazilian Troubles.

The recent political disturbances in the Republic of Brazil have excited great solicitude. The information we possessed was too meager to enable us to form a satisfactory judgment of the causes leading to the temporary assumption of supreme power by President Fonseca, but the information did not fail to express its anxious solicitude for the peace of Brazil and for the maintenance of the free political institutions which have been established there, nor to offer our advice that great moderation should be observed in the clash of parties and the contest for leadership. These counsels were received in the most friendly spirit, and the latest information is that constitutional government has been re-established without bloodshed.

The New Orleans Lynching.

The lynching at New Orleans in March last of eleven men of Italian nationality by a mob of citizens was a most deplorable and disgraceful incident. It did not, however, have its origin in any general animosity to the Italian people, nor in any disrespect to the government of Italy, with which our relations were of the most friendly character. The fury of the mob was directed against these men as the supposed participants or accessories in the murder of a city officer. I do not allude to this as mitigating in any degree this offense against law and humanity, but only as affecting the international questions which grew out of it. It was at once represented by the Italian minister that several of those whose lives had been taken by the mob were Italian subjects, and a demand was made for the punishment of the participants and for an indemnity to the families of those who were killed.

It is to be regretted that the manner in which these claims were presented was not such as to promote a calm discussion of the question involved; but this may well be attributed to the excitement and indignation which the crime naturally evoked. The view of this government as to its obligations to foreigners domiciled here were fully stated in the correspondence, as well as its purpose to make an investigation of the affair, with a view to determine whether there were present any circumstances that could, under such rules of duty as we had indicated, create an obligation upon the United States. The temporary absence of a minister plenipotentiary of Italy at this capital has retarded the further correspondence, but it is not doubted that a friendly conclusion is attainable.

Some suggestions growing out of this unhappy incident are worthy of the attention of congress. It would, I believe, be entirely competent for congress to make offenses against the treaty rights of foreigners domiciled in the United States cognizable in the federal courts. This has not, however, been done, and the federal officers and courts have no power in such cases to intervene either for the protection of foreign citizens or for the punishment of their slayers. It seems to me to follow, in this state of the law, that the officers of the state should with police and judicial powers in such cases, must, in the consideration of international questions growing out of such incidents, be authorized to make such arrangements as to make this government answerable for their acts in cases where they would be answerable if the United States had used its constitutional power to define and punish crimes against treaty rights.

The civil war in Chili, which began in January last, was continued, but fortunately without interference with the peaceful relations, until Aug. 23, when the congressional forces landed near Valparaiso and, after a bloody engagement, captured that city. The President of the Republic, General Diaz, who was loyal to the constitution, was expelled from office, and a provisional government was established by the victorious party. This government was promptly recognized by this government as soon as it should have established its de facto character, which was done. During the pendency of this civil contest frequent indirect appeals were made to this government to extend belligerent rights to the insurgents and to give audience to their representatives. This was declined, and that policy was pursued throughout, which this government, when wrenched by civil war, so strenuously insisted upon on the part of European nations.

The Itata, an armed vessel, commanded by a naval officer of the insurgent fleet, manned by sailors and with soldiers on board, was seized under process of the United States court at San Diego, Cal., for a violation of our neutrality laws. While in the custody of an officer of the court, the vessel was forcibly wrested from his control and put to sea. It would have been inconsistent with its integrity and self-respect of this government not to have insisted that the Itata should be returned to San Diego, to abide the judgment of the court. This was so clear to the junta of the Congressional party, established at Iquique, that before the arrival of the Itata at that port, the secretary of foreign relations of the provisional government addressed to Rear Admiral Brown, commanding the United States naval forces, a communication, from which the following is an abstract.

"The provisional government has learned by the cablegrams of the Associated Press that the transport Itata, detained in San Diego by order of the United States for taking on board munitions of war and in possession of the marshal, left the port, carrying on board this official, who was landed at a point near the coast, and then continued her voyage. If this news be correct, this government would deplore the conduct of the Itata, and as an evidence that it is not disposed to support or agree to the infraction of the laws of the United States, the undersigned takes advantage of the provisional relations now in being good enough to maintain with him since your arrival in this port to declare to you that as soon as she is within reach of our orders, his government will put the Itata, with the arms and munitions she took on board at San Diego, at the disposition of the United States."

A trial in the district court of the United States for the southern district of California, has recently resulted in a decision holding, among other things, that, inasmuch as the Congressional party has not been recognized as a belligerent, the acts done by its vessels could not be a violation of our neutrality laws. From this judgment the United States has appealed, not that the condemnation of the vessel is a matter of importance, but that we may know what the present state of our law is for, if this construction of the statute is correct, there is obvious necessity for revision and amendment.

A Disappointment.

During the progress of the war in Chili this government tendered its good offices to bring about a peaceful adjustment, and it was at one time hoped that a good result might be reached; but in this we were disappointed. The instructions to our naval officers and to our minister at Santiago, from the first to the last of this struggle, enjoined upon them the most impartial treatment and non-interference. I am satisfied that these instructions were observed, and that our representatives were always watchful to use their influence impartially, in the interest of humanity and, on more than one occasion, did so effectively. We could not forget, however, that this government was in diplomatic relations with the then established government of Chili, as it is now in such relations with the successor of that government. I am quite sure that President Montt, who has, under circumstances of promise for the peace of Chili, been installed as president of that Republic, will not desire that, in the unfortunate event of any revolt against his authority, the policy of this government should be other than that which we have recently observed.

No official complaint of the conduct of our minister or of our naval officers during the struggle has been presented to this government; and it is a matter of regret that so many of our own people should have given ear to unofficial charges and complaints that manifestly had their origin in rival interests and in a wish to pervert the relations of the United States and Chili.

The collapse of the government of Balmaceda brought about a condition which is, unfortunately, too familiar in the history of the Central and South American states. With the overthrow of the Balmaceda government, many of his counselors and officers became at once fugitives for their lives, and appealed to the commanding officers of the foreign naval vessels in the harbor of Valparaiso, and to the resident foreign ministers at Santiago for asylum. This asylum was freely given, according to my information, by the naval vessels of several foreign powers, and by several of the legations at Santiago. The American minister, as well as his colleagues, acting upon the impulses of humanity, extended asylum to political refugees whose lives were in peril. I have not been willing to direct the surrender of such of these persons as are still in the American legation without suitable conditions.

The Baltimore Incident.

On the 16th of October an event occurred at Valparaiso, so serious and tragic in its circumstances and results, as to very justly excite the indignation of our people, and to call for prompt and decisive action on the part of the government. A considerable number of the sailors of the United States steamer ship Baltimore, then in the harbor of Valparaiso, being upon shore leave and unarmed, were assaulted by armed men, nearly simultaneously, in different localities in the city. One petty officer was killed outright, and seven or eight seamen were seriously wounded, one of whom has since died. So savage and brutal was the assault that several of our sailors received more than two, and one of them as many as eighteen, stab wounds.

An investigation of the affair was promptly made by a board of officers of the Baltimore, and their report shows that these assaults were unprovoked, that our men were conducting themselves in a peaceable and orderly manner, and that some of the police of the city took part in the assault, and used their weapons with fatal effect, while a few others, with some well-disposed citizens, endeavored to protect our men. Thirty-six of our sailors were arrested, and some of them, while being taken to prison, were cruelly beaten and maltreated. The fact that they were all discharged, no criminal charge being lodged against any one of them, shows very clearly that they were innocent of any breach of the peace.

So far as I have yet been able to learn no other explanation of this bloody work has been suggested than that it had its origin in hostility to these men as sailors of the United States, wearing the uniform of their government, and not in any individual act or personal animosity. The attention of the Chilean government was at once called to this affair, and a statement of the facts obtained by the investigation we had conducted was submitted, accompanied by a request to be advised of any other or qualifying facts in the possession of the Chilean government that might tend to relieve this affair of the appearance of an insult to this government. The Chilean government was also advised that if such qualifying facts did not exist this government would confidently expect full and prompt reparation.

It is to be regretted that the reply of the secretary for foreign affairs of the provisional government was couched in an offensive tone. To this no response has been made. This government is now awaiting the result of an investigation which has been conducted by the criminal court at Valparaiso. It is reported, unofficially, that the investigation is about completed, and it is expected that the result will soon be communicated to this government, together with some adequate and satisfactory response to the note by which the attention of Chili was called to this incident. If these just expectations should be disappointed, or further needless delay intervene, I will, by a special messenger bring this matter again to the attention of congress for such action as may be necessary.

The entire correspondence with the government of Chili will be an early day be submitted to congress.

The Chinese Troubles.

The president calls the attention of congress to the action of the Chinese government in their refusal to receive Mr. Blair as our representative and also to recent outbreaks, which he considers are not the result of any foreigners in particular, but an insurrection against public order, and urges the expediency of making such provision by law for the temporary admission of some Chinese artisans and laborers, in connection with the exhibit of Chinese industries at the approaching Columbian exposition. "I regard it as desirable that the Chinese exhibit be facilitated in every proper way."

Spanish Affairs.

The rights of American citizens in the Caroline Islands were then lightly touched upon; lamenting the injustice to our countrymen on account of the neglect of the Spanish government, calling further attention to the proposed celebration of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America, which event is to be held in Madrid, and urging congress to accept the invitation extended to this government to participate in its celebration.

Russian Emigration.

The Mexican treaty, the death of King Kalakua and the influx of Russians, on account of their expulsion from the domains of the czar, to this country, is referred to, and which is likely to assume proportions which may make it difficult to find homes and employment for them here, and to seriously affect the labor market. It is estimated that over one million will be forced from Russia within a few years.

The Hebrew is never a beggar, he always keeps the law, often under severe and oppressive civil restrictions. It is also true that no race, sect, or class has more fully cared for his own than the Hebrew race. But the sudden transfer of such a multitude, under conditions that tend to strip them of their small accumulations and to depress their energies and courage, is neither good for them nor for us. The banishment, whether by direct decree or by not less certain indirect methods of so large a number of men and women, is not a local question. A decree to leave one country is, in the nature of things, an order to enter another. This consideration, as well as the suggestions of humanity, furnishes an ample ground for the remonstrances which we have presented to Russia, while our historic friendship for that government cannot fail to give the assurance that our representations are those of a sincere well-wisher.

The Navassa Insurrection.

The Navassa troubles have been referred to, and the cause of them particularly outlined by the president, and in conclusion, the president said:

"I recommend legislation that shall place labor contracts upon this and other islands having the relation that Navassa has to the United States, under the supervision of a court commissioner, and that shall provide, at the expense of the owners, an officer to reside upon the islands with power to judge and adjust disputes, and to enforce a just and humane treatment of the employees. It is inexecutable that American laborers should be left within their own jurisdiction without access to any government officer or tribunal for their protection, and the redress of their wrongs."

The Copyright Law.

International copyright has been secured, in accordance with the conditions of the act of March 3, 1891, with Belgium, France, Great Britain and the British possessions, and Switzerland, the laws of which countries, by admitting to our citizens the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to their own citizens or subjects. With Germany a special convention has been negotiated upon this subject, which will bring that country within the reciprocal benefits of our legislation.

Free Trade vs. Protection.

The financial department of the country has been much argued during the last year by reason of the conflicting predictions, which accompanied and followed the tariff and other legislation of the last congress affecting the revenues, as to the results of this legislation upon the treasury and upon the country. On the one hand it was contended that imports would so fall off as to leave the treasury bankrupt, and that the prices of articles entering into the living of the people would be so enhanced as to dangerously affect their comfort and happiness, while on the other it was argued that the loss to the revenue, largely the result of placing sugar on the free list, would be a direct gain to the people; that the prices of the necessities of life, including those most highly protected, would not be enhanced; that labor would have a larger market, and the products of the farm advanced prices; while the treasury surplus and receipts would be adequate to meet the appropriations, including the large exceptional expenditures for the refunding to the states of the direct tax and the redemption of the 4 1/2 per cent. bonds.

Treasury Statistics.

It is not my purpose to enter at length into a discussion of the effects of the legislation to which I have referred; but a brief examination of the statistics of the treasury and a general statement of the state of business throughout the country will, I think, satisfy any impartial inquirer that its results have disappointed the evil prophecies of its opponents and in a large measure realized the hopeful predictions of its friends. Rarely, if ever, before in the history of the country has there been a time when the proceeds of one day's labor or the product of one farm acre would purchase so large an amount of those things that enter into the living of the masses of the people. I believe that a full test will develop the fact that the tariff act of the Fifty-first congress is very favorable in its average effect on the prices of articles entering into common use.

Our Foreign Commerce.

During the twelve months from Oct. 1, 1890, to Sept. 30, 1891, the total value of our foreign commerce (imports and exports combined) was $1,747,806,406, which was the largest of any year in the history of the United States. The largest in any previous year was in 1890, when our commerce amounted to $1,647,139,093, and the last year exceeds this enormous aggregate by over one hundred millions. It is interesting, and to some will be surprising, to know that during the year ending Sept. 30, 1891, our imports of merchandise amounted to $324,715,270, which was an increase of more than eleven million dollars over the value of the imports of the corresponding months of the preceding year, when the imports of merchandise were unusually large, in anticipation of the tariff legislation then pending. The average annual value of the imports of merchandise for the ten years from 1881, was $269,315,522, and during the year ending Sept. 30, 1891, this annual average was exceeded by $135,535,550.

Free Imports.

The value of free imports during the twelve months ending Sept. 30, 1891, was $113,092,387, more than the value of free imports during the corresponding twelve months of the preceding year, and there was during the same period a decrease of $108,846,598 in the value of imports of dutiable merchandise. The percentage of merchandise admitted free of duty during the year to which I have referred, the first under the new tariff, was 48.18, while during the preceding twelve months, under the old tariff, the percentage was 34.57, an increase of 13.61 per cent. If we take the six months ending Sept. 30, 1891, which covers the time during which sugars have been admitted free of duty, the per cent of value of merchandise imported free of duty is found to be 55.37, which is a larger percentage of free imports than during any prior fiscal year in the history of the government.

Tariff Not Oppressive.

If we turn to exports of merchandise the statistics are full of gratification. The value of such exports of merchandise for the twelve months ending Sept. 30, 1891, was $292,193,136, while for the corresponding previous twelve months it was $280,177,115, an increase of $22,016,021, which is nearly three times the average annual increase of exports of merchandise for the preceding twenty years; this export amount and value the exports of merchandise during any year in the history of the government. The increase in the value of exports of agricultural products during the year referred to over the corresponding twelve months of the prior year was $45,366,127, while the increase in the value of exports was $19,388,240. There is certainly nothing in the condition of trade, foreign or domestic, there is certainly nothing in the condition of our people of any class, to suggest that the existing tariff and revenue legislation bears oppress-

General Prosperity and Contentment.

It may be argued that our condition would be better if our tariff legislation were upon a free trade basis but it cannot be denied that all the conditions of prosperity and of general

contentment are present in a larger degree

than ever before in our history, and that, too,

just when it was prophesied they would be in the worst state. Agitation for radical changes in tariff legislation is therefore unwarranted

and may seriously impede business, to the prosperity of which some degree of stability in legislation is essential. I think there are conclusive evidences that the new tariff has created several great industries which will,

within a few years, give employment to millions of our people, and American workmen and women. In view of the somewhat overcrowded condition of the labor market of the United States, every patriotic citizen should rejoice at such a result.

Last Year's Revenues and Expenses.

The report of the secretary of the treasury

shows that the total receipts of the government, from all sources, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, were $455,544,383.03,

while the expenditures for the same period were $421,304,476.46, leaving a surplus of $37,239,706.57. The receipts of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, actual and estimated, are $453,000,000, and the expenditures $469,000,000. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, the estimated receipts are $455,336,350, and the expenditures $441,300,000.

THE SUPREME Court of Illinois has just decided that money paid on "margins" where the understanding is that no goods or stock is to be actually delivered or transferred, as is the case in all of the "Bucket Shop" transactions, can be recovered back.

It is gratifying to think that America has another country open to which she can send her dogs.

By the recent action of the French ministry pork shipped from the United States bearing the stamp of approval of Commissioners of the Department of Agriculture, is to be admitted, to French ports, where it will be inspected at the expense of the American shippers, by French Commissioners, and if found healthy, stamped with their seal of approval, which will entitle the consignees to place it on the market.

ACCORDING TO previous assignment, the petition of Sawtell, the fratricide, was heard this week by the Supreme Court of New Hampshire, and summarily dismissed after giving the prisoner ample opportunity to rehearse the bloodcurdling narrative of his atrocious crime, in which he attempted at times a dramatic roll that rendered him a subject of ridicule rather than pity as he had expected.

The tale related by the prisoner from beginning to end was an exhibition of sordid depravity, remarkable mainly for the effrontery with which the author attempted to make justice a mockery.

On the fifth of January the culprit will expiate his crime upon the gallows unless execution is delayed by some new move.

THE CAPE Cod Item has abandoned all purely local features and hereafter will cater to the literary cravings of the general public. The price has been reduced to twenty-five cents per annum and by advertising liberally it is expected to build up a large circulation all over the country.

The scheme is rather a novel one and what success it will receive can only be conjectured.

The publishers have purchased several other papers which they will publish as general periodicals.

THE GROWTH of daily newspapers, particularly the local penny dailies has developed a competition in the service of news which has proved detrimental to the old established weekly and semi-weekly local newspapers, and in some instances publication has been entirely suspended but in the large majority of cases it has resulted only in a diminution of profits consequent upon reduced subscription lists and advertising patronage.

Most local weeklies, publish beside the regular quantity of local news, more or less of general literature including some fiction and thus continue to make themselves acceptable to the reading public regardless of the consideration of news. The local weekly in every enlightened community fills a place that no other paper can fill. It is relied on to voice the sentiment of its community upon all purely local questions that daily papers have not the time, space nor inclination to deal with fully and in detail.

Everybody therefore who has the welfare of his community at heart feels called upon to sustain the local paper by his subscription and general influence, and it is a noticeable fact, that the communities which best support the local papers are numbered among the most progressive municipalities.

Owing to an accident to our press on Saturday last, part of this edition has been delayed.

AFTER THIRTY ballots Hon. Charles F. Crisp of Georgia was nominated Speaker of the National House. The fight for the place was stubbornly fought and his election is considered a victory of the Hill faction over the Cleveland wing of the Democracy.

Judge Crisp is a native of England, being born at Sheffield while his mother was there on a visit from this country. He is a man of limited schooling and during the war served in the Confederate army.

Upon the formal ballot of the House on Tuesday the vote stood 223 for Crisp, 83 for Thomas B. Reed and 8 for Thomas C. Watson.

We call attention to a number of new advertisements in this issue of the PRESS. They will be found distributed through all of the eight pages and are of particular value to our readers at this season of holiday present purchases.

The illustrated poems given Tuesday evening by the Brooksie Club in the South church vestry were a success both from a financial and artistic standpoint, and the vocal selections by Misses Mabel Roberts and Lina McPherson added much to the pleasure of the entertainment.

A young man named O'Connell was bitten in the cheek by a terrier dog on Tuesday, while playing with the animal.

A petition to Gen. Cogswell signed by various leading business men in town, praying that the General will use his influence to secure the re-appointment of Thomas H. Jackman, the present postmaster, was sent to Washington on Wednesday. It contained about 400 names mostly Republicans. Among the business firms which signed the petition were the Standard Thermometer Co., the Downing-Knapp Co. and Newell & Knowlton. All the prominent Democrats in town affixed their signatures to the petition, and among the well known Republicans were the following: G. Horace Merrill, B. S. Wheeler, Chas. S. Osgood, Frank W. Stanley, G. Fred Osgood, Aug. Harrington, Thomas W. Shepard of the Republican town committee, Frank A. Dow, R. S. D. Symonds, George F. Sanger, Dr. George S. Osborne, Calvin Pierce, George H. Poor, Albert A. Messer, Elbridge Rust, C. S. Emmerton, Jefferson K. Cole, Amos H. Corey, Arthur F. Poole, John A. Lord, George H. Little, John Pinder, Charles H. Goulding, Joseph Jacobs, Jacob Osborn, and E. P. Barrett. One or two smaller petitions in behalf of Mr. half of Mr. Jackman have also been forwarded as well as several personal letters protesting against a change.

There are two cases of scarlet fever in one house on Lowell street and a case of diphtheria at the Goodale farm in West Peabody.

The reception held at the Second Congregational Church proved to be a very successful affair. About 175 persons were present and had a very enjoyable time.

The F. M. C. T. A. Cadets propose to hold a dance in Temperance Hall on Walnut street on the 15 of Jan.

At the annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. the former officers were re-elected, Miss M. J. Floyd president, Miss M. M. Cutter secretary, Miss M. J. Buxton treasurer.

At the earnest solicitation of the South Church, Miss Mary J. Floyd has withdrawn her resignation of the office of the church missionary.

The town committee at their meeting Thursday night voted to recommend Willard G. Cook for postmaster and to hold no caucus. It is thought however a caucus will be ordered, as has been done in other towns, in some of which the Democratic incumbent carried to day with Republican voters.

The Naumkeag company has petition for leave to connect the Essex rails at the Corner of Buffum and School streets Salem, with their own line on North Street.

A boarding house thief named Popalorum who went through Meehan's boarding house ten years ago, has been located by Chicago detectives, but the local authorities have decided not to prosecute it was so long ago.

A mass meeting will be held in Town Hall next Thursday evening at 7.30 to express a choice for Postmaster.

No one has ever yet sent in a million cancelled postage stamps to the Post-office Department, although 200 letters are received annually requesting information about the prize of $300, which the government is supposed to offer for that number. How this popular delusion originally started no one can tell.

For twenty years it has prevailed, and during all that time people have been making collections for sale to Uncle Sam. Presumably, no one has thus far secured the desired million. At all events, the packages of old stamps sent to Washington on instalments never contain more than a few thousand; 50,000 were the most that ever came in one bundle.

A most interesting, beautiful, and rare exhibition and novel display for Salem, is to take place at Almy, Bigelow & Washburn's immense furniture warerooms, Essex street, next Friday and Saturday. Mr. H. Kasabian and Mr. P. Kasabian, two natives of Turkey, who have come to this country to be educated, have an immense lot of oriental rugs, carpets, portieres, table scarfs, tidies and embroideries, given them by their parents, to be turned into money. They had no cash but quantities of oriental goods. There are antique, Persian, Cashmere, Daghestan, Bokhara, Circassian, Egyptian, Armenian, Gourgistan, Arzingan, Moorish, Kouristan, Boulagistan, Damgal, Afghan, Tiflitz, camel's hair Ashiet and Kerbelia rugs, carpets, mats, portieres and embroideries. The goods are all the way from 30 to 300 years old, and have come from the palaces of the khedive of Egypt, Sultan of Turkey, Shah of Persia, Amir of Afghanistan, Czar of Russia, Bey of Circassia, Dghianghiro of India, and from the temples, mosques, ruins, and other sacred places of the Old World. The large carpet salesrooms at Almy, Bigelow & Washburn's is given up wholly to the display. It is a most magnificent display. It is a most magnificent sight. If it is a possible thing for you to go in and see this display beyond any description that can be given here, you should most assuredly do so. There are catalogues printed in English to tell each article and they are all to be sold at public auction for just what they will bring. The sale by auction is to begin on Monday morning, December 14th, at 10 30 o'clock, and continue all day; also on Tuesday and Wednesday if necessary in order to close out every piece. There are between 700 and 800 pieces. J. E. Conant & Co., of Lowell, are to serve as the auctioneers and the sales are to take place regardless of weather. Messrs. Almy, Bigelow & Washburn feel that every customer & friend should visit the exhibition even if they do not desire or cannot attend the sales.

The Massachusetts Broken Stone Company at Salem has started up again, after a shut-down for the winter as they supposed. When the shut-down was made the storage bins were full, but now they are nearly empty. The company is doing a big business.

The electric work of the Naumkeag has come to a standstill at Beverly and the prospects are now that nothing will be done until spring.

Salem re-elected Hon. Robert S. Rantoul on Tuesday. The following Aldermen were also re-elected. James H. Turner, Arthur W. West, and Arthur S. Palfrey. Daniel J. O'Brien Philip Little, William F. Cass and Edward H. Knight are elected for the first time. The School committee is as follows: Ward 1—J. D. H. Gauss is one of the proprietors of the Salem Observer; 2, Harry C. Leach is a salesman in Boston; 3, Dr. George A. Bates is a practicing dentist; 4, Dr. H. J. Gafney, is a practicing physician and Hubbard Breed a bookkeeper in Boston; 5, Edward Collins is a bookkeeper in Boston; 6, Edwin O. Foster is a journalist by profession.

Rev. Mr. Ashley of Merrimac has accepted a call to the Baptist church at Millbury. Henry Loftus, shoemaker of Danvers aged 40, died Sunday evening from the effects of a fall down stairs. The National Board of Fire Underwriters has offered a reward of $500 for the capture of the incendiary of the Queen hotel at Beverly. Dr. C. R. Teed, the Chicago "Messiah," preached twice to his followers at Lynn Sunday. The attendants at both sessions was very large, hundreds flocked to the hall from curiosity. This is the fourth time in three days that he had spoken in public.

Chief of Police Goodwin of Amesbury went to Fall River to take the little Brisson girl, whose mother is in jail, to her friends there. She has been stopping at the almshouse.

Charles Williams, an East Saugus boy employed in C. S. Sweetser's stitching room at Lynn caught his left hand in a button-hole cutter, Tuesday afternoon. The hand was badly lacerated. Williams was conveyed to the Hospital, where his wound was dressed.

Clothing in a closet of James W. Furbush's house, 93 Henry avenue, Lynn, was ignited, Tuesday, by Mr. Furbush's young son, who was playing with matches. Miss Fannie McFarland promptly extinguished the blaze. The damage was but slight.

A stranger engaged board, Tuesday, at 83 Willow street, Lynn, and was given a room with George A. Page. The stranger departed during the night, and Tuesday morning Page missed a suit of clothing $35 in money, two razors and a meerschaum pipe were gone.

Superior Court came in at Salem on Tuesday morning for its regular Dec. list of civil business, Justice Hammond presiding. Prayer was offered by Rev. L. B. Nobbs of the Central Baptist church. Samuel R. Brown of Lynn and Alonzo B. Fellows of Ipswich are foremen of the juries.

Mrs. Jonas French in Business. Mrs. Jonas French will not resign her position as Massachusetts committee member of the world's fair. With a true exhibition of the pluck and spirit she has gone directly into the work of a professional decorator of houses for teas, balls, dinners and like functions.

ESSEX COUNTY.

Plain Talk a monthly published at 5 Beckman St., N. Y. City in the interest of the wide awake boys and girls and their mothers, is edited by F. H. Palmer, East Boxford, a writer of ability and a warm friend of young people. The December number just issued contains a Christmas story by Natalie Lord Rice, daughter of Rev. C. B. Rice, of Danvers Centre. Its departments are devoted to stories, fancy work, pieces to speak with instructions as to emphasis and gestures, Natural History, etc. The publishers evidently do not mean to get into ruts as their premium offers are both novel and attractive. They are giving away a collection of 20 varieties of seeds, views in foreign lands, books, etc. If you send them your cabinet they will make you a dozen beautiful photographs. It is only 50 cents per year and the publishers will send it three months on trial for only 5 cents. They give a sample simply for the asking. The local and county associations have attracted the attention of people in this vicinity particularly, to the publication and doubtless the Essex County subscribers will be quite numerous.

Delegates from ten cities and towns of Essex county, representing 2500 men, met in Creamer hall this week to perfect a central labor organization. Temporary officers were chosen to hold office until an election in January. At the meeting 20 labor organizations were represented, who in turn represent nearly 10,000 men. Salem will be the headquarters.

ELEVATOR TO SALESROOMS.

Wm. Webber & Co.

Seventh Annual Greeting,

and even though the clock of our business career (in this new location) has struck the seventh year off, and we have been styled one of the "Old Firms," yet age has not lessened our ardor, but still strong and progressive, we wish one and all in advance a

MERRY CHRISTMAS,

and promise that the experience of the past has enabled us to make the present exhibition of surpass anything ever hitherto attempted by us. We cordially invite all to come and examine the goods, and whether for purchase or not, you will receive uniformly polite attention.

HOLIDAY GOODS

Peculiar

Peculiar in combination, proportion, and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom. Peculiar in its strength and economy, Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One Hundred Doses One Dollar." Peculiar in its medicinal merits, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown, and has won for itself the title of "The greatest blood purifier ever discovered." Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell than of all other blood purifiers. Peculiar in its phenomenal record of cures, it has sold abroad no other "Peculiar" preparation ever attained so rapid nor held so steadfastly the confidence of all classes of people. Peculiar in the brain-work which it represents, Hood's Sarsaparilla combines all the knowledge which modern research has developed, with many years practical experience in preparing medicines. Be sure to get only

LOCAL LINES.

Next Saturday afternoon the depositors of the Co-operative Bank will have an opportunity to pay the regular monthly assessments. A new series will also be issued to a limited amount.

The next lecture in the free course, which will be delivered by Hon. John D. Long, upon Abraham Lincoln, will be Wednesday instead of Thursday in Town Hall.

The funeral of Harry Hardy took place from his late residence on Aborn street, Salem, last Sunday, the funeral service being conducted by Rev. George A. Phinney, formerly of this town. Deceased was a member of Masconomo Tribe I. O. Redmen which was represented. A beautiful floral piece from the local tribe as well as one from the Niagara Council O. U. A. M. were noticeable among the tributes. The remains were interred in Harmony Grove.

As soon as the new feed wire is strung on Margin street, electric cars will be run to the Gardner farm, where passengers to and from Danvers will be transferred. A car was run over the through North Salem line to this point on Monday to test the system.

President Francis H. Appleton is making efforts to increase the membership of the Agricultural Society, and to this end has sent a circular letter to each of the trustees, asking that they furnish him names of persons whom he can approach with a view of joining the society.

A runaway horse belonging to Mr. Mason of Topsfield, attached to a top buggy collided at the Gardner farm on Sunday with a stone wall. The vehicle was wrecked. The horse freed himself from the wreckage and jumped the wall into the adjacent pasture, where he was subsequently captured. The team started from North Salem.

Forest fires gave the officers some trouble recently both in South Peabody and at Gardner farm.

The pastor of the Unitarian church gave a lecture last Sabbath evening, the first of the series mentioned a week ago in the PRESS. The subject for the next which occurs the first Sunday in January is the Book of Psalms. Regular evening services will be held every two weeks, the next being one week from tomorrow.

The Essex road ran regular fifteen minutes trips last Saturday evening, with extras during the busy part of the evening.

The school committee held their regular monthly meeting Monday evening. Bills for supplies and repairs were approved. A long discussion took place on the subjects of musical work and recess. The board were unanimous in the opinion that for salutary and sanitary reasons the smaller children in the large schools should have separate recesses. The importance of music as an adjunct to discipline, as civilizing agent and as a mental drill was strongly set forth, and it was the emphatic belief of the committee that all pupils could and should acquire a technical knowledge of music from the character of the instruction they are now receiving, that no scholar should be excused from singing except for legitimate causes, that every teacher should be in school during musical instruction and give undivided support to the musical instructor. The salary of L. H. Farr of the South school was advanced $50 per year to commence with the present term. It was voted to introduce the study of the Electric primary history into the third classes in the grammar schools.

Henry O. Upton will open an afternoon dancing school for youngfolk, at Town Hall, Wednesday, Dec. 23. *

William Liston, formerly of this town, died in Haverhill, Monday. He will be remembered by many as a prominent member of Saunderson's band which flourished in Peabody several years ago.

The annual election of officers of Post 50, G. A. R., took place last Monday evening and resulted as follows: Commander, Nicholas M. Quint; senior vice, Samuel G. Southwick; junior vice, Albert E. Copeland; quartermaster, William F. Sumner; sergeant, William W. Reed; officer of the day, John C. McDonald; officer of the guard, George S. Brimmer; chaplain, Thomas E. Green.

Walter J. Lloyd has left town to accept a position in one of the largest leather factories in Milwaukee.

Some of the offices of the Town House are being provided with inside windows to keep out the cold.

Monroe & Arnold's freight and express office was equipped with a long distant telephone transmitted this week.

William Pesse for assaulting Dennis Harkins was fined $5.00 by Judge Merrill this week.

The Union Veteran Firemen Association have hired the rooms over Distin's on Main street for head quarters.

At the meeting of the Board of Engineers Wednesday evening, W. C. Roach was appointed to succeed S. A. Southwick as a member of Hook and Ladder No. 1, the latter having resigned.

The lecture on the Empire of the Czar, Thursday evening was well attended.

A slight fire was started at Sawyer's dry goods store on Tuesday afternoon by a piece of brimstone flying off the match with which the gas was being lighted. The fly netting at the rear of the window was ignited, but the proprietor being on hand promptly stifled the blaze without serious damage.

The appropriations for improvements on highways having been exhausted, no more improvements will be made until after town meeting. Mr. Besse has made good use of the money appropriated.

NICHOLS of Salem in said County, dated March 14, 1879, and recorded with the Deeds of said County (South District), Book 1915, Leaf 18 and for breach of condition of said mortgage will be sold at public auction, at the office of F. E. Farnham, 8 Allen's Block, Peabody Square, on Monday, the twenty-first day of December, A. D. 1891, at three o'clock in the afternoon, All and singular the premises conveyed by said mortgage, viz. A certain piece of land with the dwelling house thereon, bounded northerly by land formerly of S. C. Bancroft, Easterly on land of Patrick Murphy (being the same land described in deed of John Mahoney) the westerly line bounding on land formerly of S. C. Bancroft and the southerly line on Goodridge street, so called. Said deed of John Mahoney is dated June 1, 1890, and recorded in Book 609, Leaf 237, Essex Registry, Southern District.

Also, a lot of land on the northeasterly side of a way called Granite street, leading southeasterly from Washington street, bounded thus: viz., Southerly by land of Elijah W. Upton, Southwesterly by said Granite street about 332 feet, northwesterly partly by land formerly of Thomas H. Mahoney and partly by land of Putnam, northeasterly by the Herick Swamp 350 feet as the walls and fences about said lot now stand.

Also, at the same time and place, by virtue of the power of sale contained in certain mortgage deed given by Sidney C. Bancroft to Charles S. Nichols dated Aug. 19, 1873, and recorded in the deeds of said County, Book 889, Leaf 3, and for breach of condition of said mortgage, the premises therein conveyed, viz., a certain parcel of land with a dwelling house thereon, situated on High street, in said Peabody, and bounded and described as set out in said Records. Also the real estate described in deed of A. W. Forniss to said Charles S. Nichols recorded in said Registry, Book 640, Leaf 223 in the judgment of partition recorded in the clerk's office of the superior court for the County of Essex in the case of Charles S. Nichols vs. Edward Fortiss et al., entered in 1862, Terms at Sale.

FASHIONS

EVENING GOWNS.

Favorite Materials of the Season and Fashions in Bodices.

One of the newest materials for evening wear is crepe ombre, a diaphanous material with shaded stripes fading one into the other. More antique is in fashion again. It is one of the favored materials for young ladies' dresses this season. An example seen had a white ground, over which were laid line stripes in several colors. Tricolored silk is used for sashes to wear with dresses made of plain material.

Silk net is much employed over petticoats and bodices of silk or satin of the same color. In the illustration here given is an attractive ball dress of silk net. The net in this instance is of a lemon hue, and is made over satin of the same shade. The trimming on the skirt and bodice consists of lemon colored satin ribbon, edged with a narrow ruche of net bordered with silver tinsel.

An effective dancing dress is one made of the new black silk net, cut into narrow flounces, each of which is edged with narrow satin ribbon. These flounces begin at the waist and form the entire skirt.

Bodices are much trimmed, but in various ways; some are made with a nearly round waist and a slightly pointed waist-band of velvet. Sometimes the skirt is sewed onto the round waist and hidden with a corselet; and there is, again, the dress that fastens on one side all the way down, beginning at the shoulder, then under the arm and the side of skirt—all this fastening hidden by a band of embroidery, lace or other garniture.

Ornaments for the Hair.
Ornaments for the coiffure are becoming more elaborate and consequently more costly. Many of these ornaments approach the size and importance of back combs. Enamelled flowers incrustured with gems, pins surmounted with diamond stars or crescents, fillets and tiaras are all included in the long list of hair ornaments now so fashionable.

COMBS, FILLETS, GREEK BAND AND HAIR-PINS.
In the cut are shown some of the favored ornaments. Conspicuous among these is the long tortoise shell hairpin, headed with an asp in green enamel with ruby eyes, the whole overtopped by an egret. Fig. 2 represents another tortoise shell hairpin surmounted with a star in diamonds. Fig. 3 is a gold pin surmounted with a double circlet in gold, dotted with graduated gems, an osprey escaping from a gold filigree cup shaped flower. Fig. 4. Tortoise shell comb, with ornament in antique pierced silver. Fig. 5. Grecian band in chased gold or tinsel ribbon. Fig. 6. Flat prong in tortoise shell, headed with a quaint design in openwork silver. Fig. 7. Tortoise shell prong, headed with a gilt semiquatrefoil. Fig. 8. Josephine bandeau, with three fillets composed of richly chased gold. Diamond tiaras are made in several styles, some few being almost copies of the diadems worn by the royalty of Europe.

One of the newest styles, and a very simple one, represents ribbon bows and knots in gold and enamel.

Items in French Millinery.
The French milliners use little fancy pins in place of stitches wherever possible. The trimming on some of the new hats is entirely put on with pins. Old paste ornaments may be turned to good account now for trimming bonnets. They are used for fastening velvet bows. It seems likely that the ridiculously small bonnet will be followed by the ridiculously large bonnet. This of course will not be a surprise to those who know fashion's moods.

The "four-in-hand" is one of the newest shapes in felt hats. It is to be had in various shades of gray, drab and brown. The trimming is generally a velvet band fastened with a jet or paste buckle and three black tips at the side. The most becoming hats for schoolgirls are the wide brimmed beaver felts. They only need a band and a bow for trimming.

The Newest Laces.
The newest Chantilly has peacocks, pagodas and Cupids in swags introduced into some of the designs. Chiffon has been made in the lace machines as stripes alternating with lace insertion, but certainly the newest feature in this season's lace is the boldness of the designs, where Cupid is seen with bow and arrows, also birds, and grasshoppers appear to crawl. The old fashioned wire grounds have come in again, and these, as well as many other laces, are made in the fourteen inch depths for basques, and have a heading, which obviates any other trimming. Cobwebs are a favorite pattern in black silk guipure. Etern and white are mixed in the new white laces, and the very white tinge of last season has been superseded by a bluer tone.

"In winter," says Yuan Mei, a Chinese writer, "we should eat beef and mutton. In summer, dried and preserved meats. As for condiments, mustard belongs specially to summer; pepper, to winter."

Specimen Cases.
S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was troubled with Neuralgia and Rheumatism his Stomach was disordered, his Liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite all away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured him.

Edward Shepherd, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O., had five large Fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured him entirely. Sold at Wm. T. Lee's Drug Store.

The silk industry shows that a single cocoon from a well fed silkworm will often produce a continuous fiber more than 1,000 yards long.

Now Try This.
It will cost you nothing and will surely do you good, if you have a cough, Cold, or any trouble with Throat, Chest or Lungs. Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs or Colds is guaranteed to give relief, or money will be paid back. Sufferers from La Grippe found it just the thing and under its use had a speedy and perfect recovery. Try a sample bottle at our expense and learn for yourself just how good a thing it is. Trial bottles free at Wm. Lee's. Drug Store. Large size 50cts. and $1.00.

Distressed mother (with crying baby in railway carriage)—"Dear, dear! I don't know what to do with this child." Kind and thoughtful bachelor (on the opposite seat)—"Shall I open the window for you, madam?"

STARTLING FACTS.
The American people are rapidly becoming a race of nervous wrecks, and the following suggests the best remedy: Alphonso Hempling, of Butler, Pa., swears that when his son was speechless from St. Vitus dance Dr. Miles' great Restorative Nervine cured him. Mrs. J. R. Miller, of Valparaiso, and J. D. Taylor, of Logansport, Ind., each gained 20 pounds from taking it. Mrs. H. A. Gardner, of Vistula, Ind., was cured of 40 to 50 convulsions a day, and much headache, dizziness, backache and nervous prostration by one bottle. Trial bottles and fine book of marvelous cures, free at Wm. T. Lee's, who recommends and guarantees this unequalled remedy.

Pains in the back are frequently caused by a sudden wrenching of the spine. A few applications of Salvation Oil will give permanent relief.

A Call for Pearline

brings the best washing compound in the world, and the original one—all others are imitations. It costs no more than common soap. It does more than soap's work, and half of your own besides. Anything that needs cleaning can be washed with it—without scouring, rubbing and scrubbing, and with absolute safety. Make its acquaintance; millions of women call it their best friend.

Every grocer keeps it, because he has constant calls for it.

Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back. JAMES PETER, New York

A CITY LUXURY.

Just as the city looks to the country for most of the luxuries used on its tables, so the country must turn to the city for those conveniences which are justly termed luxuries for the hard-working housewife. City housekeepers have learned to realize that to save time is to lengthen life.

SAPOLIO!

is one of the best known city luxuries and each time a cake is used an hour is saved. On floors, tables and painted work it acts like a charm. For scouring pots, pans and metals it has no equal. IF YOUR STOREKEEPER DOES NOT KEEP IT YOU SHOULD INSIST UPON HIS DOING SO, as it always gives satisfaction and its immense sale all over the United States makes it an almost necessary article to any well-supplied store. Everything shines after its use, and even the children delight in using it in their attempts to help around the house.

lose five dollars or more, in ruined, tender, rotted clothing

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla.

18 Pounds of Blood.

Is about the quantity nature allows to an adult person. It is the utmost importance that the blood should be kept as pure as possible. By its remarkable cures of scrofula, salt rheum, etc. Hood's Sarsaparilla has proven its claim to be the best blood purifier.

Mrs. Bloomburp—What long hair are the Yale locks you have heard of.

Harsh. But —?

"Ho," said a well-known statesman,
"I shall never believe that woman has the proper judgment and sense to cast a ballot, or interfere in politics, while she is so weak-minded as to passively suffer, year after year, from diseases peculiar to females, when every newspaper she picks up, tells of the merits of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.
Not to take advantage of this remedy is certainly an indication of mental weakness!"

There is a wholesome kernel of truth
inside the rough shell of this ungallant speech. The "Favorite Prescription" is invaluable in all uterine troubles, inflammations, ulcerations, displacements, nervous disorders, prostration, exhaustion, or hysteria. For run-down, worn-out women, no more strengthening tonic or nerve is known.

"On the contrary," answered Derwent,
"it is what I should have desired; for,
naturally, a man who has all his life
occupied a distinct and unquestioned social position is not anxious to appear in the light of a mere adventurer of fortune. And that, as I am well aware, is what I seemed to you. Well!"—he smiled slightly—"I suppose you made some inquiries about me?"

"Yes, I wrote to an old friend, a man of the highest position in New Orleans.
And this, I may remark in passing, I did not because I needed assurance myself,
but because it was an absolutely necessary step if I was to help you in a business point of view. Well, my friend's reply was so flattering that some day I will show it to you. Only one thing in his letter puzzles me a little. After speaking of your social position and your personal character in the highest terms, he mentions that you have recently inherited from your father a large estate.
Yet notwithstanding this, am I mistaken in believing that you have come to Mexico to make money in rather perilous ventures?"

"You are not mistaken," Derwent replied, whose resolution to be perfectly candid was taken with a quickness that surprised himself. "I have lately inherited a considerable estate from my father, and I have also come to Mexico to endeavor to make money in ventures which I hope may not prove perilous. If you were not so kind I should hesitate before intruding my private affairs upon you; but since you are good enough to take an interest in me, I hope you will let me explain why I have found it necessary to take this step."

"You spoke to my daughter, I think,
of a debt of honor," said Don Maurizio,
whose clear eyes were reading the young man's face as if they would read his soul.
"Yes," the latter answered, "and the story of that debt of honor is known at present to only one person in the world
besides myself—that is my cousin, Mr.
Halbert. With your permission I will tell it to you."

Then in the briefest manner possible
he told it. The few, simple words were strong with feeling, and stronger still with purpose, as Don Maurizio, listening with an interest far removed from curiosity, perceived. When the story was finished he held out his hand. "I will do my best to help you, Mr. Derwent," he said. And no other expression of confidence was necessary.

"Now," he added, after Derwent had expressed his thanks, "let us consider the best means of helping you—that is,
of enabling you to accomplish your end in the shortest time possible. And here comes, I believe, very favorably impressed with the value of the Buena Esperanza?"

"I have never seen a better mine," Derwent answered. "Nothing is needed
but the proper application of scientific methods to realize a great fortune from
it. But I have understood that Senor Barrera will not sell."

"He will not, but the other owners will. Their shares of the mine have been offered to me. Barrera is anxious that I shall buy them out, put in machinery and work the mine for a half interest in the result. I have not the least doubt that it would be a good investment, and I thought of doing this before Fernandez ordered his bond. That bond has now been canceled, and before I left Miraflores Barrera renewed the old proposal to me. I asked him if he was willing to transfer the offer to you, and he agreed to do so. Now, Mr. Derwent, this is a chance which does not occur every day—not even in Mexico. What do you think of it?"

"Simply one thing," replied Derwent without a moment's hesitation—"that I accept it gratefully. I confess that it changes my plans materially, for my original intention was not to work mines in Mexico, but to sell them. As soon as I saw the Buena Esperanza, however,
the desire to develop its splendid locations came over me. Yet if I had taken the mine at that time I should have resisted
the desire, partly because I could not afford the necessary outlay of capital, but chiefly because I wanted to realize my money quickly. Now, however, that immediate need is relieved. Time will be given me in which to pay the debt, and I think I can venture to risk the capital requisite for working."

"If you are inclined to allow me a share in the mine," said Maurizio, "I will assist you to work it."
"I shall be delighted to allow you whatever you wish to take," Derwent replied. "Could I do less when it is to you I am indebted for the whole? Do you think I am indifferent to the fact that you have stood aside in order to benefit me?"

"I am too busy a man to undertake mining myself," the other said, smiling,
"but with you as an active partner I have little doubt we shall succeed. I have long known the value of the Buena Esperanza. Were it otherwise—were I not sure of this investment—believe me,
Mr. Derwent, after your confidence I should not counsel you to touch it."

"I am not only sure of that," replied Derwent, "but deeply grateful for your thoughtful kindness. And no effort on my part shall be lacking to enable both yourself and Senor Barrera to realize a fortune."

CHAPTER XVIII

"And what shall that word be?" she asked.

"It is simply like a dream of the 'Arabian Nights!'" said Sibyl, as they entered the great court of the Casa Car-della, with its splendid space, its graceful arches, its feathery, broad leaved plants, its fragrance of orange flowers, its musical fountain, gilded galleries and gleaming lamps, for it was evening and the American party had been invited to dine with Derwent's Mexican friends.

Besides the language in which most of the conversation was conducted, the only English thing about the entertainment was the fact that the group of men lingered a little over their wine and cigars after the ladies had left the room.
The interval, however, was not long, and when they re-entered the salon Derwent
at once perceived his opportunity to exchange a few words with Dona Zarifa.

She and Sibyl had been walking up and down the long, splendid room, while Mrs. Derwent sat on the special sofa of honor with Dona Luisa and talked French fluently. Both girls paused as the gentlemen entered, and Miss Lenox sank gracefully into a seat, while Dona Zarifa moved away to where a vase filled with great masses of growing heliotrope stood on a pedestal of puebla onyx. She began to gather a few sprays, and the fragrance of the flowers filled the whole atmosphere around her. It was almost intoxicating in its sweetness, Derwent thought, as he moved on toward the lovely, classic figure and the dark, soft eyes with their glance of welcome.

"Are you gathering those sprays of heliotrope for me, senorita?" he asked, smiling. "Thanks; you are too good to answer that presumptuous speech by giving me one. It is delicious—I have never seen heliotrope bloom anywhere else as in Mexico—but, if I might venture to say so, there is another flower that I would prefer to have."

"And why should you not venture?"
she asked. "Surely you have learned that with our flowers at least we are generous."

"What are you not generous with?
But your cactus?" he looked at the blossoms
she wore in her belt—"is so entirely your own that I fear you would not care to give it to a stranger?"

"Oh!" she glanced down, smiling and blushing a little, "it is the cactus you mean? Well, frankly, I think the helio-trope suits you better. This, as you say, is especially for Mexicans."

"And may I not be adopted, in a de-

What isCASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhoea and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

Dr. G. C. Osgood,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

Dr. J. F. KINCHLOE,
Corway, Ark.

The Centaur Company, 77 Murray Street, New York City.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

DRAMATIC AND MUSICALPARK THEATRE.

Tonight completes the fifteenth week of Neil Burgess' boundless success—the County Fair. Seats are in great demand and it looks as if the interest would be kept up to the end of the year's engagement. It is of no use to wait to avoid the rush, for so far it has increased with every performance. The people know a good thing when they see it and go again and again.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Miss Agnes Huntington and her own company in the latest operatic success "Captain Thersie" have made a favorable impression upon the patrons of the Globe Theatre this week. Her reception has been highly enthusiastic. She sings and impersonates very cleverly. Next week is the last of her engagement.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

Monday evening "The Fire Patrol" will commence an engagement at the Grand Opera House. It is a sensational drama in five acts, and much of its dramatic interest lies in its realism, which shows both the Colorado miner and the New York City firemen in their respective vocations. The play is well put together and its good points will be made the most of. It has won approval of New York's critics and we trust will meet with favor in "cultured Boston."

BOSTON THEATRE.

The Minnie Hauk Opera Company closes its engagement at the Boston Theatre tonight with Il Trovatore. Monday a one week's engagement of "A Fair Rebel" will begin, with Edward R. Mawson and Fanny Gillette as leading stars. The play introduces some striking scenery representing the rebel prisons and other historic locations.

TREMONT THEATRE.

Rosina Vokes! How many thousands have been delighted and charmed by the music of her voice, and amused by the artlessness of her manner. If it were only possible to know, no doubt that the world has been made brighter by her living in it, for she has brought sunshine into the hearts of mankind, and taught them that, after all it is said and done, "life is what we make it." And her reception here will be a royal welcome, and in keeping with her pre-eminent ability as the brightest, winsomest comedienne upon the stage.

For the first week of her stay at the Tremont Theatre, which begins next Monday night, Miss Vokes has selected one of her old but most popular and successful bills, i. e., "A Game of Cards," "My Milliner's Bill," and "A Pantomime Rehearsal." The first named is, without doubt, one of Mr. Morris' most clever efforts, the second is that charming comedietta of Godfrey's, in which Miss Vokes will sing her famous song, "His 'art was true to Poll," and the concluding number, "A Pantomime Rehearsal," one of the most amusing pieces in the repertoire, of this charming organization. It is described as a "skit" on amateur theatricals. It has no plot whatever, but is only, and only purports to be, an imitation of the efforts of some fashionable amateurs to act a pantomime under the supervision of the author. The much badgered author is played by Courtenay Thorpe; his principal tormentor, an irascible Frenchman with his own "conception of his part," is played by Felix Morris; the heavy dragon, "who can't make out what it's all about," by Charles J. Bell; while Miss Vokes, Miss Lane and her other associate ladies illustrate different degrees of feminine stupidity. None of them can by any chance give the proper interpretation to the unhappy author's lines, and their dancing and gestures, in imitation of very raw amateurs, are equally bewildering.

Since its last presentation here Miss Vokes has added a number of new features to this delightful piece, chief among them a Shadow dance arranged and performed by herself. In addition to its artistic and graceful performance there is a humorous idea underlying it in the fact, that the performer is making frantic efforts to keep in the calcium light, which performs all sorts of vagaries under the guidance of the amateur calcium light man, and finally explodes, creating great consternation and a very comical scene. Another new feature of "A Pantomime Rehearsal" is a trio and dance written especially for Miss Vokes by Brandon Thomas, and entitled "The Diplomatic Fairies," which is an exceedingly pretty thing, and in which Miss Vokes is gracefully assisted by the Misses Grace Filkins and Marion Kilby.

The famous author and genial satirist, "Max O'Rell" (Paul Blouet,) will deliver his noted "causerie" (entirely rewritten and amplified.) "America has seen through French Spectacles," in this theatre on Sunday evening Dec. 13. On Thursday afternoon, Dec. 17, Max O'Rell will deliver an entirely new causerie upon the subject, "Her Highness Woman." With her superlative skill, he should be able to treat such a fine topic with infinite grace, and with delicate finesse and chivalric polish, which are the possessions of his nation, and eminently so in his own individual case.

"Thermidor" at the Hollis Street Theatre and "Jane" at the Columbia are reigning attractions. The "Sailor's Knot" at the Museum is also still popular.

For Kidnaping a Prisoner

District Attorney Stevens summoned Preston B. Sibley, of Brooklyn, Conn., to appear before the Grand Jury, Thursday morning, to answer to the charge of arresting William Phillips in Lowell and taking him to Conn., without requisition papers, which according to the law, is a criminal offence. The Governor will demand the release of Phillips and the punishment of Sibley. It has been said that Sibley has repeatedly done this same at the law thing and was well aware of the time.

Ex-Gov. Long's Lecture.

As announced in the Press last Saturday, ex-Governor John D. Long, delivered his lecture on "Abraham Lincoln" in the Town hall on Wednesday evening, that auditorium having been secured by the Lyceum Committee of the Peabody Institute to give ample opportunity to all to hear this distinguished speaker on a subject of so much interest to every true American citizen. Arrangements were also made for admitting the first classes of the several grammar schools and the opportunity was generally availed of by the scholars.

The hall was well filled and the speaker, although not welcomed with violent outbursts of applause held the attention of his audience until the close.

He prefaced the lecture with the remark that nothing new could be said by him upon the subject, but as was expected, the speaker had an original, finished and scholarly dress for the aggregation of facts well known to most of the older people present, that gave the subject as much appearance of novelty as was possible. He traced the career of America's late chief from his humble boyhood and youth, step by step until he reached the summit of his greatness, and dilated upon the causes which led to the struggle for emancipation of the colored race, which shed so much luster around the memory and character of the subject of his lecture, and devoted some time to an explanation of Lincoln's individual views of the great question that engrossed the country during the period of and prior to his Presidential career.

The lecture covered one hundred and fifty six pages of foot's cap and occupied an hour and a hour and twenty minutes in delivery.

The next in the free course will be at the Institute on New Year's eve, and will be the first of four to be delivered by Prof. E. S. Morse of Salem. The subject will be "Temples and Theatres of Japan."

Highway Robbery.

On Tuesday evening as Mr. Joseph Flint was returning home from his shop at the flag station on Grove street, about 10 o'clock, he was seized by two men, one of whom held him, while the other rifled his pockets, extracting about $90 in bills and small change.

Complaint was made to the Police, and on Monday morning John Torikian, an Armenian employed at Harrington's tannery on Walnut street was arrested upon the charge of being one of the highwaymen.

Torikian, it is alleged by Mr. Flint called at his shop and had a patch put upon his shoes just before the robbery and as he answered the general description of one of the assailants was believed to have committed the crime.

The case was called before Judge Merrill on Thursday morning for trial, George Holman appearing for the prosecution and Frank E. Farnham for defence.

Mr. Flint is very deaf, and it was necessary to administer the oath and conduct the examination of him by writing the form of the oath and questions for him to read, which took up considerable time, that would have been otherwise unnecessary.

The complainant testified that on Tuesday evening the prisoner called at his shop and took away the shoes which he had repaired, giving in payment 25 cents and receiving ten cents in change and at about 10 o'clock he was proceeding towards his home on Walnut street, when he was assaulted and robbed as described, money being taken from his vest and hip pockets.

225,000 BOTTLES.

MERIT WINS!

DANA'S SARSAPARILLA has actually cured more people in the last six months than all other sarsaparillas ever cured. It drives out all competition. Its work is marvelous. It absolutely cures, yes, CURES. Have you tried it? If so, you know for yourself.

Dana Sarsaparilla Co., Belfast, Me.

He described his assailants, one of whom he said was a man about the size of Lawyer Holman. He pointed out the prisoner as the man for whom he repaired the shoe, but testified very emphatically that he did not see the face of either men at the time of the robbery, and only judged the prisoner to be one of the two from his size.

Upon cross examination he said many people were in the habit of coming into his shop who were about the size of the prisoner, that he could not see his assailants faces and when interrogated regarding the amount of money he exposed when the prisoner was in his shop replied that none was shown except a small amount of change necessary to exchange the quarter.

Officers Peasley and Sweeney both took the stand but the testimony they were able to give was so irrelevant that counsel for defence did not consider it necessary to cross-examine.

Several witnesses were present ready to testify that at the time the assault was committed the prisoner was in his boarding house reading the Bible, but the government having failed to establish the identity their testimony was not offered and the case was discontinued.

There was absolutely no testimony put in that would lead and unbiased person to think it probable that the crime was committed by the defendant. Even the money found upon his person when arrested, was in envelopes, probably just as it had been received from the employer for wages, and did not tally in any way with the money that somebody undoubtedly stole from Mr. Flint.

The complainant is an industrious hard working man and gets his living by repairing shoes—but is considered by some, careless in carrying so much about on his person. He is about 70 years of age and has been totally deaf since he was 22, which renders him an easy prey for foot pads.

It will be remembered that he was assaulted and robbed of $15 nearly two years ago, at about the same hour of the evening and near the same spot, but the culprits at that time escaped owing to his inability to identify them positively.

This morning Billy Gorman and Joe Coleman were arranged for the same offence and held in $500. for the Grand Jury upon testimony principally of Eugene L. Kiley to whom the prisoners made damaging admission.

Tuesday Elections.

Municipal elections were held on Tuesday in the Massachusetts cities which had not before elected their officers.

Boston re-elected Mayor Nathan Matthews Jr. by a plurality of 15,558, although the Republicans gain two aldermen. The majority for license is 4327, while last year it was 15,240.

Worcester re-elected Mayor F. A. Huntington, and changed its vote for license last year to 401, majority against license this year.

Lynn elected Elihu B. Hayes for Mayor by a handsome plurality, and went for license by a reduced majority.

Newburyport elected Orrin J. Gurney for Mayor, and went for license.

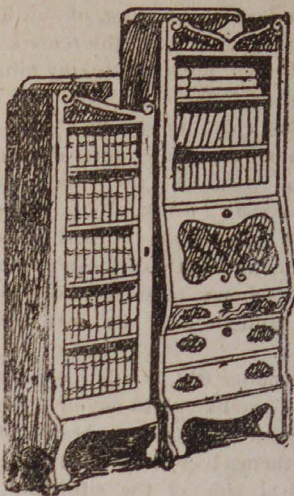

Penelope—It is dreadfully hard for poor Henderson to die just when he did. Jack—Why? Penelope—Why? Why he was about taking up his residence in Boston.

New York Letter.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Dec. 19, 1891.
786 Lafayette Ave.,

"It is almost as bad to stuff oneself ill as to drink oneself drunk," Mr. Beecher once remarked to some friends who had been suffering from engorgement during the holiday season. The lassitude, headache, and general irritability which seems to be the consequence of the national turkey, the national mince pie, and the imported plum pudding of our Thanksgiving day, brought the remark of the celebrated preacher to my mind with renewed force. Personally a case of bilious colic, or even a series of convulsions are more agreeable to look upon than is the man overcome by strong drink, but when the cause of the illness is the result of intemperance, there doesn't seem to be much choice between the man who has stuffed and the man who has drunk.

I wonder why people feel called upon to behave like gluttons on Thanksgiving and Christmas. Many of them eat themselves into fevers, and the comical side of the situation is that they never know what is the matter with them. A friend has just called who has been suffering from malaria since Thanksgiving, and another is sure he is threatened with typhoid fever. I am convinced that it was the mince pie in both the cases, and in the other instances which have come under my observation it was the plum pudding that did the mischief.

The ways of housekeepers are mysterious. Why a heavy dessert should be added to a heavy dinner I cannot imagine, and isn't it time to depart from the teachings and practices of our foremothers in this respect?

It seems that Brooklyn has feasted more generously this Thanksgiving than ever before—perhaps to show its delight in escaping a water famine.

A sensible housekeeper who has the welfare of the world at heart, sends me simple recipes for simple desserts, and advises that such pleasant and digestible articles of diet shall always be partaken of after a hearty dinner. One is orange jelly, which she recommends as safe and delicious. I give it with great pleasure, and one is sea moss blancmange which I have preached so much about. Of course I am glad to emphasize that recipe: Take two ounces of gelatin to the juice of five oranges and one lemon, a little of the orange peel and two cups of granulated sugar. Soak for half an hour in a pint of cold water, then add three pints of boiling water and stir till the sugar is dissolved. Strain through a fine sieve or jelly bag, pour into molds and cool. It takes some time to harden, and it is well to make it the day before it is wanted.

For Sea Moss blancmange wash carefully half a teacup of moss in tepid water and add it to a quart of milk and a pinch of salt. Use a vessel that will not scorch and let the contents stew slowly until the milk thickens. Try occasionally, till you learn to make it, by cooling a teaspoonful. If it hardens it is done. Wet a bowl or mold in cold water and pour in. When cold eat with sugar and cream.

This correspondent also sends what she calls "guides for indefinite measures". They are as follows, and will undoubtedly be found very useful:

One quart of sifted flour weighs but one pound. One quart of pulverized sugar weighs about one pound seven ounces. One pint of closely packed butter weighs about one pound. One tablespoonful of butter weighs one ounce. Ten eggs weigh about one pound. One quart of corn meal weighs about one pound.

This bright cook has invented a new bread recipe, which she asks me to try before recommending. This has been done and it is all that she claims for it. The texture of this bread is a little different from the usual loaf, and is good for a change. One pint milk and water (blood warm). 1 tablespoonful of butter, and one half teaspoonful of salt. 2 Fleischmann's yeast cakes. Enough twice sifted flour to make a soft dough. Rub the butter into the flour—sift in the sugar and salt, dissolve the yeast in a little water from the 1 pint. Mix with a wooden spoon, and beat well, adding flour till it is just dry enough to stick to the pan. Never knead it. When sufficiently risen, take it up in your floured hands just touching it enough to mold it, and put it into pans to rise again, from 15 to 30 minutes. When it begins to blister, put into the oven. This will make two medium-sized loaves that will cut smooth as cake. If it browns too rapidly cover with paper; this will prevent the crust from getting tough.

It is so strange that housekeepers do not more clearly understand the necessity of providing such food for the family as can be digested without trouble and properly assimilated. Not only would there be more health in the household but much less friction and anxiety in the management of all the affairs pertaining to it.

A Southern writer informs me that she has boxes and bags of feathers and ribbons, and pieces of velvet. She would like to make some Christmas presents of hats to some of her friends who are too poor to buy as pretty ones as can be constructed from her materials. But she doesn't know how to go to work, and what shall she do?

My advice would be to select the things which will be most becoming to the persons she wishes to make happy, and pay a milliner to put them together. It seemed to me the other day as I amused myself by looking at the pretty things on Broadway, that I could almost make a hat myself, the styles are so simple and so charming. Just now this great thoroughfare is looking its very best, and the sidewalks are crowded with style seekers. The handsomest window and the one which attracts the most ladies is Lord & Taylor's magnificent great corner window on Broadway and 20th Street. From morning till night this vantage ground is occupied by ladies in quest of the unique in costume. Here can be found the ladies of society, the beautifully attired modiste who is seeking the latest designs and materials for her customers. And women do not make up the whole audience at this popular Broadway corner. The display is so artistic and so remarkably beautiful that men often linger and look, and perhaps take home valuable hints to their women folk. This is a swell show, and appeals to all who are possessed of good taste, and furnishes many an idea to those who are unable to indulge in such elegant fabrics. There are reception and dinner dresses, the most charming and stylish wraps and mantles, opera cloaks, and hats for every face and complexion. The blending of colors shades in these wonderful costumes, show the hand of an experienced artist, and who can wonder that the world stops to pay its tribute, and that the counters which hold these almost priceless goods are surrounded by those who have learned outside just what to purchase inside.

ELEANOR KIRK.

When you want the best medicine ever made, use DANA'S SARSAPARILLA. It will cure you.

Ordinarily, the collector gets tired by the time 4,000 or 5,000 have been gotten together. Children mostly are engaged in this interesting but fruitless pursuit, though many women, both old and young take it up for a while and bother everybody they know for contributions of stamps from old letters.

People are constantly writing to the department with requests for stamps to put in their albums, both domestic and foreign. Sometimes they say the dealers charge more than they can afford, and they appeal to Mr. Wamaker. A while ago the post-office used to sell specimen sets of its issues, unused, but that was discontinued in 1884.

A very interesting album is kept in the stamp division, containing sets of all the stamps that the government has ever issued. The book is worth a lot of money merely for the face value represented by its contents.

On the first page are two stamps of Uncle Sam's issue in 1847. One of them is for five cents, with a head of Franklin, and the other is for ten cents, with Washington's bust. Before that year letters were distributed by mail in packages with accompanying way-bills, and the prices charged for postage, varied according to the distance.

On another page of the scrap-book are found the first perforated stamps, which appeared in 1857. Up to that time the stamps had to be cut apart with shears.

The perforations then were made much finer than they are now. It is said that the British government paid a large sum for the idea, but the United States did not give a cent for its use.

Another page in the scrap-book is occupied by the stamps of 1869, which were so very beautiful that the printing of them cost too much and they had to be discontinued. Whereas Uncle Sam's postal tokens at the present time are less handsome than those of almost any other nation, these were among the most exquisite ever issued. The fifteen-cent brown bore a picture of Columbus in blue. The twenty-four cent green was adorned with the "Signing of the Declaration" in purple. The thirty-cent stamp had a lovely design representing a shield, eagle and flags in red, white and blue.

The twenty-cent sort was in green, with a steamship on it; the three-cent denomination was ultramarine, with a locomotive, and the two-cent brown showed a man on horseback.

All these colors cost money, and where a stamp was printed in two tints it had to go through the presses twice. Accordingly the entire series was soon suppressed.—Washington Star.

DANA'S SARSAPARILLA is guaranteed to absolutely cure disease, and it does it too.

LITERARY NOTES.

The Christmas number of Frank Leslie's Weekly is simply superb. It is even better than last year's, and that is saying a great deal. Its cover reminds one strongly of English publications, but its pages are filled with the best American art and letter-press. Its double page represents the crusade of the children in the thirteenth century, when over 300,000 of these little people lost their lives in attempting to recover the holy sepulchre at Jerusalem. Among the other delightful pages are "A Slippery Day in Boston," and the exquisite reproductions of the work of some of America's best amateur photographers. For sale by all newsdealers. Price 25 cents.

The Judge people have certainly kept their promise made to the public some few weeks ago. Never has there been such an exquisitely funny Christmas publication as their number which is now in the market. It is printed superbly and illustrated by Judge's famous artists. We cannot enumerate the special features contained in it, but one can enjoy many a good hour in hearty laughter over its pages. If any Christmas publication should go to every home, surely this issue of Judge should be that one. For sale by all newsdealers. Price 25 cents.

The Pansy for December is now ready; it is not necessary for us to read all the stories to know whether it is wholesome for children. It is the same with this as with all magazines published by this firm—all that could be desired for the young people. It contains many short and elevating stories from the able pen of Pansy. It is also full of beautiful illustrations, and we are sure that the young folks who read it will feel better, stronger and happier for their association with such wise and entertaining friends as Pansy, Margaret Sidney and the other favorite authors. It is only $1.00 a year, 10 cents a number. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston.

The December number of Babyland is already here, and is quite as enchanting to the little people as preceding numbers have been. It is full of pretty pictures, and with its merry jingles and pretty stories Babyland is sure to delight every baby. Suitable for children whose ages range from one to six. Nothing better for Christmas stocking on tree than a year's subscription. The price is only 50 cents a year; 5 cents a copy. Published by D. Lothrop Company, Boston, Mass.

Our Little Men and Women for December is a charming number, full of delightful pictures and pretty stories and verse. The little folks will be sure to hail it with joy. It is printed on fine paper in large type. This magazine is both entertaining and instructive, and is suitable for children whose ages range from five to nine. A year's subscription will make the very best of Christmas presents. The price is only $1.00 a year, 10 cents a number. D. Lothrop Company, Boston, Publishers.

The Siberian Bloodhound
In view of the discussion regarding the Massachusetts law, it may be interesting to know the origin of the so-called "Siberian Bloodhound." Some twenty years ago Mr. George E. Stevens first introduced to the general public a number of Danes, which he imported for use in an "Uncle Tom's Cabin" company. He pictured them on his bills as great ferocious monsters, with red mouths and blood dripping lips, in pursuit of Eliza Harris. To further thrill the public he called them the "Siberian Bloodhounds". The name originated in his own fertile brain and was purely the inspiration of a theatrical manager, who was seeking something sensational for advertising purposes. These animals heavily chained and muzzled he paraded up and down the streets in the cities he visited. Other enterprising managers soon followed his example, and within a few years every place of importance had been introduced to the great "Siberian bloodhound". It is not to be wondered at that an ordinary legislature made the mistake of believing that these dogs lived on raw human blood.

Mr. Stevens now lives at St. Joseph, Mich., and while he has discarded the "Siberian bloodhounds" and "Uncle Tom's Cabin" he maintains a kennel of sporting dogs and manages a theatrical company of a different kind.—Forest and Stream

As the sun is superior to the stars, so DANA'S is superior to all other Sarsaparillas.

As she enters womanhood, every young girl needs the wisest care. Troubles beginning then may make her whole life miserable.

But the troubles that are to be feared have a positive remedy.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription builds up and strengthens the system, and regulates and promotes every proper function.

It's a generous, supporting tonic, and a quieting, soothing nerve—a legitimate medicine, not a beverage, free from alcohol and injurious drugs. It corrects and cures, safely and surely, all those delicate derangements and weaknesses peculiar to the sex.

A remedy that does cure is one that can be guaranteed. That's what the proprietors of "Favorite Prescription" think. If it doesn't give satisfaction, in every case for which it is recommended, they'll refund the money. No other medicine for women is sold on such terms.

Decide for yourself whether something else sold by the dealer, is likely to be "just as good" for you to buy.

SPECTACLES.

If within our homes we would use the same "specks"

That we use when we visit next door. And search for the flaws as we did over there. I think we would find many more.

If we'd use the same "specks" when we look at ourselves

That we don't when our company's near. I fear we would need what would magnify less. Or astonished we'd be, never fear!

But I find all possess (where'er they may live) For the world use a kind deftly made.

With the glasses all darkened, to hide half the view. So their own faults remain in the shade.

But the ones which they use when at others they glance Have the glasses transparently clear.

With a power to magnify things twice the size That the same through the dark ones appear.

Now I think that the world would much happier be If the specks, once for all, we would change.

And within our own rooms use the spectacles clear. With the dark for the much broader range.

Then, the faults that appear to us judg'dly rough. Would melt into outlines so fair.

We would find that the world was a beautiful place. And good people lived everywhere.

—Bertha Packard Englet in Good Housekeeping.

FORGOTTEN.

There are few who have not heard or read of the great French revolution of the last century, when cruel men seized on the government of France, when human life was of no account, and when, as if wearied with its wickedness, God seemed to have hid his face from the sinful land.

No one may count up the tears that were shed, the moans that were made, the deaths that were broken in those dreadful times; but here and there out of the great mass of human misery history has preserved a record of the trials and sufferings of some hapless ones, reading which we shudder and thank God that we live in happier days.

Some few years after the Reign of Terror—as this outburst of sin and madness was well named—a man of middle age entered a small inn in Germany and called for refreshments. His manners were timid and shrinking, and he looked as if he might just have recovered from some terrible illness—he was so strangely, ghastly pale.

The landlord supplied his wants, and, half curious, half in kindness, he made some remark as to the stranger's appearance, coupling it with the question, "Did he want aught else for his comfort?"

"Nay, nothing," said the pale man hastily; "I have food and light and air, what could I want more?" and he sighed deeply.

"My friend," said the landlord, seating himself, "you speak as if you had known the want of these things. Have I guessed aright?"

His guest looked up. "Would you hear my tale?" he asked. "For years I have kept silence, but today it seems as if it would lighten my heart to speak. Listen and believe it if you can. Less than seven years ago I was a gay, light-hearted youth in this our quiet fatherland. Having no near relations, I was led to visit some distant ones who had lived for many years in a small town in France.

"My uncle, as I called him out of friendliness, was a kind, good fellow, well known and respected in the place, where he carried on the craft of a watch-maker, and he proposed that I should become his apprentice and partner. I liked the little town, I liked my uncle, I liked my aunt, and I soon gave my consent. They had no children—I thank God for that—but my aunt's kindly soul could not be content without young people around her, so she kept and clothed two house maidens, children of some poor neighbors. Trim and neat they looked, too, wearing the costume of that part of Germany from whence my aunt came, a pretty fancy of her own; it seemed quaint enough in a strange land.

"It was a happy household. No wonder I was glad to belong to it; but, alas! it was soon to be swept away by terrible affliction. For some time we had heard of strange troubles going on in Paris and the large towns, but our little place was still quiet. One morning, however, we woke to find everything in confusion. Our mayor had been ordered to resign, and his place was to be filled by some one sent from Paris.

"Still, we never dreamed of what fearful misery this was the forerunner. We had no time to dream, either, the blow fell so suddenly. There had been a stir going on in the market place for the two days following the arrival of the new official; but my uncle and I were busy over a discovery which he had made in our trade, and we were less than usual in the streets.

"At noon, on the third day, however, he went out for a stroll to rest his eyes and look about him for a few moments. My aunt and her maidens arranged as usual the midday meal, and we were all ready to sit down, only my uncle was missing. He was usually so punctual that we wondered and waited, and at last we dined without him. At the close of the meal I stepped out to look for him.

"I had not got a dozen yards from our house when I met our baker's wife, her eyes staring out of her head.

"Go back," she said, "go back! It is too late. The monster—the wretch! He has executed the honest man, without even the farce of a trial, on the accursed guillotine yonder!"

"I was petrified with horror. Could she be speaking of my uncle, so respected, so quiet as he was? It was too true. The wretch in office had lost no time, but had begun his work of bloodshed at once, and my uncle was his first victim, his only crime being that he was of foreign birth, and had sheltered under his roof, some months since, a poor Swiss. I retraced my steps to the house. My aunt's anxious face met my troubled gaze. She had begun to suspect evil. The two girls waited fearfully in the background. I tried to speak, but I turned away and burst into tears. I was young then, Master Landlord, and had tears to shed. My aunt passed me by and rushed into the street, straight to the market place. I could not follow. What happened there was told me later.

"With wild agony at her husband's fate, my gentle, loving aunt had burst into a flood of reproach of his murder. In these days this was crime enough for the heaviest punishment, and before evening she had fared the same fate as my uncle.

"The Reign of Terror had indeed begun with us. The girls had fled, terrified at the fate which had befallen their protectors, and I was meditating in a half stupefied way the same measure, when a knock came at the door, and two men, who had often eaten and drunk at my uncle's table, came in and made me a prisoner, confiscating all the possessions of the family to the state.

"In those days a man's foes were often they of his own household. I offered no resistance; the shock of the day had completely unmanned me. I made certain that I, too, should die that night. But my time was not yet come.

"In consequence of the lateness of the hour I was taken to the town prison, a dismal building, which I had never known to be occupied. There I was thrust into a deep dungeon, and left in total darkness till the morning, when I doubted not I should be conducted to the same cruel fate as my poor relatives had met. But morning came, as I had guessed by the sound without, and still no summons. Worn out with suspense and waiting, I fell asleep. When I awoke hunger and thirst oppressed me. Happily I had stored some bread and meat and a small bottle of wine in one of the pockets of my coat preparatory to my intended flight. Of this I now ate and drank. No one came nigh me, and yet I could hear sounds as if wretched prisoners were being led forth out of neighboring cells, doubtless to death; for they wept and pleaded vainly as it seemed to me.

"But the third day a great stillness fell on the prison. I could not understand it; my senses were enfeebled for want of food, for my small stock had long been exhausted and I almost lacked strength to wonder why I was left to live so long. Presently arose an awful terror, lest this should be my sentence, to perish miserably for want of food in this damp dungeon. Death on the scaffold appeared light by comparison. I clamored at my prison door. I shouted as loudly as I could—all to no purpose. Then I burst into an agony of tears; my fate was too dreadful to bear. With the soft nature of my youth I pitied and bemoaned myself sorely. All at once words came into my mind that I had learned years ago as a text in the school. 'Fear thou not, for I am with thee: be not dismayed, for I am thy God.'

"They came like a ray of light into my prison, and I clung to the promise as if it had that

THE EIGHTY-FOURTH birthday of John Greenleaf Whittier the Quaker bard, author of Barclay of Uray and Barbara Frietche was fittingly observed Thursday by the presentation of many kind remembrances from friends, scholars and statesmen far and near.

With each succeeding year his noble life and character become more dear to all who feel proud to claim him as a friend, neighbor, or countryman. The benevolence, purity of character, simplicity of manner and transcendent genius which combine to make his character unique, can hardly be hoped for in another for generations to come. His character and genius seem born for a definite mission which has nobly been fulfilled, and continuance of his sweet life to this ripe age is a boon for which humanity should be truly thankful to Divine Providence.

CHRISTMAS TIME has come again, but were it not for the tempting display of holiday novelties upon the counters and in the windows of the enterprising storekeepers, most of whom are inviting your attention through the columns of the PRESS today, one would hardly appreciate the fact, so mild has been the weather up to date.

Eight above zero—Fahrenheit is the lowest to which the mercury in reliable thermometers, not extraordinarily situated has descended. And only once, (Tuesday last) has snow covered the earth hereabout, and then only for a few short hours.

The typical Christmas with its mantle of snow and merry sleigh bells has become a thing of the past in this region, but as a day for exchanges of friendship offerings and general merry making, Christmas is becoming more generally observed with each succeeding year.

WE PUBLISH to day in another column the prospectus of the Boston Journal.

Since the change in management and the consequent rearrangement of the Journal, it has become more popular than at any time since its establishment. The Journal can always be relied upon to serve accurate reports of current events, untainted by anything that should debar a paper from the home circle. The reputation for conservatism earned in the past is not effaced now that the spirit of progress has infused new life into its management, and the Journal is considered by no mean critics the best daily news paper published in Boston.

WE PUBLISH today upon the second page the first of a series of letters from New York by Eleanor Kirke, which will be found particularly interesting to the ladies while not altogether unsuited to the masculine mind.

IT LOOKS very much as if Postmaster Jackson would be his own successor. There is a wonderfully strong feeling in favor of civil service reform just at present, although the doctrine in the abstract is very little appreciated.

Recommend For Re-appointment.

About four hundred people assembled in town hall on Thursday evening, including half a dozen ladies who had the balconies all to themselves, for the purpose of discussing the appointment of a postmaster for the four years next ensuing. Mr. Jefferson K. Cole called the meeting to order and in a short and piquant speech stated the object of the meeting after which he read the following telegram, just received from Gen. Cogswell at Washington, which rendered further proceedings unnecessary:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 17. THOS. H. JACKMAN, P. M.: I don't know what the President will do, but on the ground of your efficiency, and because I believe it will be generally accepted to the good people of Peabody and because you were a good soldier I shall recommend your reappointment.

WM. COGSWELL.

The chairman called for suggestions or remarks, and Chairman Goulding (Republican) of the Selectmen, took the floor and moved a resolution, that the meeting endorse the action of Gen. Cogswell, which was promptly seconded. The motion was put to vote and carried without a dissenting voice, the vote in the affirmative being very general.

Remarks were made by several gentlemen. Mr. Samuel Trask read a short address containing some statistics showing in what particulars the mail service had been improved, under Mr. Jackson's management and how much money has been kept in local circulation by increased salaries and the employment of the letter carriers.

Mr. Rufus H. Brown said he considered the present convention a tribute to the faithful and efficient services of Mr. Jackson of which he might justly be proud. Mr. Cole said he had always been a republican but he stood before the meeting as a representative of no political party merely, but as a citizen interested in the welfare of the town. He related a few changes in the railway mail service secured through the personal efforts of Mr. Jackson, among them the direct transmission of mail between Peabody and Boxford, a small town of the county to which he had frequent occasion to send letters. Under the old regime his mail matter went round about, through Boston and elsewhere; while by the changes secured he was enabled to send messages direct, so as to have them reach their destination within thirty minutes.

After some further complimentary remarks by prominent gentlemen, the meeting adjourned.

The telegram of General Cogswell was received with great applause.

THE TWO BROTHERS

A Text from the Tablets.

Robert Andrews, 30.

William Andrews, 24.

When the struggle commenced between the two great sections of the country, the north possessed a class of citizens almost unknown in the other section, and in regard to whose qualities and attributes there was a very inadequate conception. By this class is meant the sturdy, keen, self reliant and self respecting mechanics; men who dressed well, lived well, read the papers, took an interest in all the questions of the day, and were as proud in their way as the haughtiest scions of the Southern aristocracy.

The Andrews boys were good specimens of this class. They were skilled workmen, earned good wages, and belonged to that great body of men in the army of the north, who could repair a railroad, build a broken bridge, start up a battered locomotive, while keeping their guns clean and their eyes on the enemy.

The boys were born in New York state, around the tanneries of Philip and Adna Southwick, and moved here with their parents about forty five years ago. Their father, Charles Andrews, was a handsome Englishman who was killed in the boiler explosion at the old Jacobs' factory just twenty eight years ago this month, the mother Arabella Ellis, was a stately Irish woman. They settled in that portion of the town known then as Southwickville, but which has since borne the more potent patronymic of Dublin. At that time Tremont street, was little better than a cart track. All the intersecting streets between Wallis and Harmony Grove were mere courts with a few houses towards Walnut street and nothing but fields clean to North Salem. Over many of these the writer was wont to replenish the boyish exchequer on the approach of the glorious fourth by weeding the fragrant and succulent onion.

The boys grew up strong, tall fellows, full of spirit and foremost in every youthful sport. Before they were well in their teens they joined the Volunteer Engine Co. were selected as leading hosemen the next year and were always foremost where danger called, where daring was needed. Bob, as the oldest was always called, had a serious impediment of speech which in moment of excitement almost stopped communication, but he could sing the entire Red, White and Blue without a break. He had a most unconquerable love for gamecocks, and in the breeding and raising of these delectable birds was considered an exponent. Bill was a taking, masterful boy, a natural, born leader, with a wonderful, deep voice, the pride of the old glee club. He had all the qualities which captivate a crowd of firemen, and even to this day, the old boys love to tell of his generosity, his impetuous gallantry, his songs and his stories.

When war was declared, they were among the early volunteers and as they had been members of the old Salem artillery, their military training made them acceptable recruits. Bob, with three companions from this town, enlisted in Co. H., Chelsea Volunteers, which was attached to the 1st. Mass. Reg. The impediment in his speech prevented the promotion he merited, but he was a thorough soldier in every thing that pertained to a soldier's duty and he shared in all the good and bad fortunes of that gallant regiment. Through all the vicissitudes and hardships that befell that army of the Potomac in the varying campaigns and among the various commanders, he bore his part bravely. At length the man of silence and success came and said: "I shall fight it out on the line if it takes all summer." In one of the furious charges in the Wilderness on the 5th of May, 1864, just ten days before the expiration of his service, Robert Andrews was swept away by the enemy, with many others and became a prisoner of war. He was reported among the missing, but it was a time of confusion and apprehension, and big with events, and it was long before his fate was known to his friends. One day two gaunt and famished looking men came home, relieved from the horrors of Andersonville, Charles P. Pierce and Augustus Forness and they reported that he had been a prisoner with them and was soon to be exchanged. His poor wife waited wearily, hoping day after day, but alas, he never came back to her. Shortly after he was transferred to Florence, where he died from starvation homesickness and exposure, and she, heartsick and utterly worn out fell into a decline from which she never rallied and died a few years later.

William Andrews, the younger brother, enlisted at Readville, in the 2nd Mass. Reg. Col. Geo. H. Gordon. Many of the officers of this regiment were from the best families of Boston, students from Harvard college. The Colonel was an accomplished soldier, well trained in the severest school of military tactics, and a rigid disciplinarian. Many of the young soldiers chafed sorely at the stern exactitude of duty, which to them at that time seemed unnecessary, but in their harassing duties on the upper Potomac, in the hurried marches and hasty combats ever recurring up and down the Shenandoah valley, they soon realized the advantages of their rigid training, and acknowledged the splendid qualities of their commander. The early experience of William Andrews in the school of a soldier was apparent in his every movement, and promotion rapidly followed his enlistment. As orderly Sergeant of his company he exercised those qualities of energy, activity and promptness so requisite for his position and so necessary in the face of a daring and vigilant foe. The fiery Jackson had gathered under his banner the best blood of Virginia, and when like a thunderbolt he burst with his legions on Banks' little army so fierce and so potent was the shock that retreat became inevitable. At this time privation and exposure during this terrible winter campaign brought on a serious lung trouble and our young soldier got a two week's furlough to recruit his health. Perhaps the boys were not glad to greet him. The question was, what to do for him, what to give him to take back.

Money they could not offer, clothes he could not use, revolvers and such would be useless, so finally determined to get—what do you suppose?—well, a blanket. The warmest, and the wooliest and the finest that money could buy. In the hurried retreat the troops had lost everything but their guns—and their honor. The commissaries were overwhelmed with requisitions for clothing and the choice of the boys was a wise one. The scene in the old engine house on Pierpont street on the night before his return to the regiment is fresh before me. The young soldier sobered and hardened by hardships and dangers, his mailed comrade George Gray beside him and the eager faces of the boys as they crowded around to give the last shake hands when "ole lang syne" was sung. A circle was formed for this parting song. The leader of the old glee club gave the signal; the band struck up an accompaniment and the good bye to their comrade became a farewell.

The Peninsula campaign was over. The Army of the Potomac was massed around Washington. Pope had taken command and the country was in a fever of unrest and expectation.

Jackson with his corps of veterans had detached himself from the main body of the Confederates, and was moving up the valley intent on mischief. Bank's command was hurried forward to bar his progress, and on the 9th of August 1862, the van of his army struck the left wing of the enemy, who occupied a strong position on Cedar mountain. There were old scores to settle on both sides. It was to be a duel to death, a fight to a finish. The battle raged with the utmost fury nearly all day, charge succeeding charge and the slaughter in proportion to the number engaged was enormous. The result was a drawn with the battle advantage in favor of the redoubtable Jackson, by reason of the strength of position and superiority of force. The 2d Regiment suffered terribly nearly every line officer being killed or wounded. The Howells and the Abbotts and the Doughtys sorrowed for their young heroes, and there was mourning in the farmhouse and in the dwellings by the sea. Here the youthful Captain Cogswell displayed those qualities of courage and capacity rallying the shattered regiment, closing up the torn ranks, presaging thus early his future brilliant career.

The battle was fought on Saturday. The full accounts did not come until the following Saturday night. The very first name after the list of officers was—killed, William Andrews. Every commissioned officer was killed. He was leading his company in the last charge, when he was struck in the forehead by a minie ball, and he died without suffering.

Let us never forget what we owe to these men. There are times when the tales should be told from the press and from the pulpit, taught in the school-room and expounded in the Senate. To those who returned let us be generous. Their gatherings and their reunions will each year be held with lessening numbers. Let not coldness and indifference be ever meted out to the old soldier. What they did and what they dared, a grateful people should always hold in remembrance, and if this little story shall be the means of a quickening recollection of the brave men who gave up their lives for a cause which was humanity's cause, then indeed it has not been written in vain.

OBITUARY.

Hon. Nathaniel A. Horton, senior editor and proprietor of the Salem Gazette and Essex County Mercury passed away on Monday afternoon at two o'clock after an illness of seven days, the result of a severe cold which was attended with physical depression.

The deceased was born at Salem, April 16, 1830, and at the age of sixteen was apprenticed to learn the printing business in the same establishment of which he has for several years been proprietor.

He was a graduate of the Salem English High school in the class of 1845.

In January 1854 he became a partner with Mr. Caleb Foote in the publication of the Gazette which business relation continued until 1888 when Mr. Foote retired from business and William A. Horton, his son, became associated with him in the company. In 1854 he married Miss Harriet Maria Symonds who survives him. The surviving children are William A., the junior partner, and Martha O., wife of Henry M. Batchelder, Esq., one son having died in childhood.

Deceased entered political life as a Whig, casting his first presidential vote for General Scott in 1852. Upon the dissolution of the Whig party he became a Republican and was elected to represent that party in the legislature in 1859. He was subsequently elected to the same trust in 1879 and '80, and was elected to the Senate in 1881 and '82. He was a delegate to the National Convention in 1889, which nominated the late President Garfield. He also served in the city Council of Salem several years and was a trustee of the Public Library.

He was a member of the Massachusetts Press Association from its organization and for two years presided over its deliberations. He was also for some years President of the Essex Conference of Liberal churches being himself a member of the Barton Square church.

Mr. Horton was a gentleman in the true sense of the term, and always practiced uniform courtesy in his private conversation as well as in public discussion. He was a thorough, vigorous debater and whether in public speech or editorial utterance evinced a sense of keen humor, that was controlled by a pleasing rhetoric. As an editor he stood in the front rank and as a public speaker was always hailed with applause.

By his death the community loses an esteemed citizen and brother, the ancient establishment is deprived of an able and highly efficient head, and his family is bereft of a kind father and loving husband.

Christmas Gifts.

One of the most enterprising business men in Salem is Geo. A. Collins, jeweler, 198 Essex street. A look at his show windows will give some idea of the rich stock of goods he carries. But if one is attracted by the goods in the windows, how much more will he be pleased on entering the store. Here may be found goods suitable for holiday gifts, in almost every conceivable pattern and style. Gold and silver watches, chains, charms, souvenirs, French and American clocks, silverware of all kinds, and other articles too numerous to mention, may be found in abundance. And one of the desiderata to Mr. Collins' patrons, is his low prices. All goods warranted as represented. Read his advertisement and profit thereby.

Rev. Mr. Reynolds will give an address to young men at the Gospel Temperance Meeting in Franklin Hall tomorrow at 5.45 P. M.

The large condor of Town Hall has been divided at the foot of the steps leading to the small hall, by an oak partition with two sets of glazed doors, which will be found a great success of comfort in extreme cold weather.

The Co-operative Bank meets tonight at O. B. Chadwicks Insurance office to the regular monthly assessments and for sales of loans.

The Historical Calendars published by the Salem Press are works of art and make serviceable holiday gifts.

Another case of hide poisoning is reported in town. Patrick F. Gunn, a tanner employed at the yards of Warren Wilson, while handling some hides recently, a part of the same lot by which Mr. Kimball was poisoned. He inoculated his flesh with virus and pyemia resulted. The hides are dry, uncured Chinas, and it is thought they were taken from diseased cattle. It is said that a disease is known to exist peculiar to China and South American cattle of such contagious nature that instances have occurred where men handling the hides have been poisoned without the infected hides coming in contact with abraded parts of the flesh. The unfortunate man was stricken with disease on Friday of last week.

State Auditor W. D. T. Trefrey will probably be appointed Savings Bank Commissioner to succeed E. P. Chapin President of the Board, who has resigned, to accept the presidency of the Pynchon National Bank of Springfield. Mr. Trefrey has proved a highly efficient officer in the single term he is just completing at the State House and has won the approval of Republicans and Democrats indiscriminately. Had he been elected to succeed himself this fall the affairs of the office would have been as ably conducted during the next year as will be possible under Gen. Kimball's administration. When the Democratic party through the assistance of Republican votes elects a State official he generally turns out to be a good one, probably because those few accidentals are the choicest fruits of the party.

A mince pie made from Dougherty's New England Condensed Mince Meat is like a rare book. Its value lies in its contents. Spicy yet wholesome.

An inebriate was taken down from a picket fence Thursday night and warmed up by the steam heat of the station house. It was an inclement atmosphere of being in an exposed situation, the mercury being down to 8 above.

Jack (who has just received a remittance)—"Then, after that, I say we have some tame ducks and—"

Dick (whose remittance has not arrived)—"Hold on! What do they stick you for that?" Jack—"Two dollars and a half." Dick—"Whew! Don't you think we'd better get a wild duck, and tame it ourselves?"

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels.

Distress After Eating

It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Sick Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." George A. Page, Watertown, Mass.

Heart-burn

It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Sour Stomach

LOCAL LINES.

The skating rink on Walnut Street is doing quite a business at its regular Saturday night sessions. Christmas afternoon and evening, there will be skating and dancing in the evening after 9.30.

Nathaniel C. Patterson janitor of the Town House is a candidate for the Post Office having filed an application a week ago, with Congressman Cogswell.

The annual meeting of the Old Ladies' Home society was held Monday afternoon and the retiring officers and board of management were re-elected: Mrs. Daniel (Grosvenor) president; Miss Mary A. Southwick, treasurer; Miss Mary A. Forness, secretary. The receipts of the board of management for the year from lawn party, fairs and other attractions were about $1100. Of this amount $763.14 was cleared by the recent fair in Town hall. The meeting passed a vote of thanks to all who assisted in any way towards making the fair a success. It was decided not to make public the cost of maintaining the home during the year, except the statement that the expenses did not exceed the income, which was about $1100 in addition to the fund of $20,000, and that none of the principal had been used. The trustees who have charge of the funds, will hold their annual meeting on the second Monday in January, but they will not give out the figures on the cost of running the institution, as they doubtless would mislead in their average and convey a wrong impression. After the home has been established two years the trustees will have no hesitation in publishing the cost of maintenance. There are now six inmates at the home and two more applications have been received.

The chimney for the Peabody Electric Light Station now rears its tall top many feet above the surrounding dwellings. An iron cap has been cast at Boston and will be set on top in a few days. There are over 146,000 bricks in the structure and within is a conical flue extending from the base to a point thirty-five feet below the top.

Maple and willow trees and rose bushes have budded out during the recent mild weather.

Conductor Stickney of the West Peabody gravel train, lost the end of the finger of his right hand while making up the train at the pit Monday afternoon.

Hannah G. Daley was fined $3 in the police court for assaulting her husband, William J. Daley.

The Boston Comedy troubadours are to appear at the institute on Christmas night for the benefit and under the auspices of the Sons of Veterans. The comedy, "Plot for Plot," by the author of "Jim, the Penman," and the comic farce, "Two flats and a sharp," interspersed with vocal and instrumental music, etc., will be presented.

The central telephone office was connected this week with John Boyle & Co's machine shop on Walnut St., from whence the electrical power is derived for operating the telephone system, in place of the "magneto" formerly turned by hand power by the operator. Now by means of a switch the circuit is closed and a small dynamo located at Boyle's furnishes the mystic fluid and saves much time and trouble for the operator.

Last Sunday a gang of men under charge of Engineer Putnam put in the necessary frogs to connect the Essex and Naumkeag rails at the juncture of Essex and Washington streets, Salem.

Rev. C. B. Lynn, Asst. Secy. of United States Universalist Convention delivers a sermon on the work of the convention tomorrow forenoon at the Universalist church. In the evening the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birth of Rev. John Murray, the first preacher of Universalism in America will be observed by addresses by the pastor and Mr. Lynn.

Henry O. Upton will open an afternoon dancing school for youngfolk, at Town Hall, Wednesday, Dec. 23.

Dean's Rheumatic Pills positively cure Rheumatism and Neuralgia. Entirely vegetable. Safe.

The firm of Morrison & Trask has dissolved, Mr. Morrison retiring from the firm. His interest has been purchased by Frank Putnam of Danvers a clerk for several years at the establishment. Mr. Morrison will engage in business at Salem.

The society of the South church has decided to adopt the weekly pledge system to meet the current expenses of the coming year. At the services Sunday morning the pastor presented the subject and pledge cards were distributed to all, the same to be returned next Sabbath morning. The system is to go into operation on the first Sabbath in January. It applies only to the offerings to the society. There is to be no change in the system of contributions to benevolent objects. These will be made on the first Sabbath of every month as heretofore, independently of the sum pledged to the society. Should there be any surplus at the end of the year, it will be distributed among the benevolent societies.

A brisk fire broke out in Brown's woods Sunday afternoon, and would have caused considerable damage had it not been promptly discovered by William Welch, who, with the help of Officer Mack, beat out the flames.

W. M. Albert F. Southwick assisted by W. M. J. F. Wiggin as Grand Marshal, installed the officers of Jordan Lodge F. & A. M. on Wednesday evening, the roster being the same as last year. After the ceremony the second degree was worked.

George Peabody Lodge A. O. U. W. will elect officers on Monday evening.

The Ladies' Unitarian Association will hold its annual meeting Friday afternoon, January 1, at the Chapel Parlor. A full attendance is requested.

The Sabbath School of the South Church will have a Christmas Tree next Tuesday evening.

A Dolls' District School.

One of the most interesting Christmas window displays that has been seen on the street for a long while is that now drawing crowds which block traffic in front of Almy, Bigelow & Washburn's store. It is a representation of a deestic schoolhouse of y olden time. The schoolhouse itself is a weatherbeaten structure some five or six feet square, the end towards the street being removed to show the interior. Back to the front stands the old school master, cap on head, birch in hand, at his ink-stained desk. Before him are some 20 or 40 bright-faced boy and girl dolls all dressed in the school going garb of 25 years ago. Girls with sunbonnets, tuckers and pantalets, boys with much patched trousers and country hair cuts, sitting at their desks. In the rear, on the stool, stands the ink-begrimmed dunce, with towering cap made of an paper. The sweeping broom hangs upon the wall beside the old list, dinner pails stand under the desks, and the water and dipper are in a handy place. The general effect is very good, and as one gets down to particulars, the realistic part of it is appreciated by such of the passers by as have attended the country school of a quarter of a century ago.

ROGER Q. MILLS.

The fight for the Speakership of the

Mr. Crisp. Hon. Roger Q. Mills is

fifty-eight years old and a resident of Corsicana, Navarre County Texas, and represents the ninth district of that state. He was first elected to the forty third Congress and has been re-elected ever since. Mr. Mills is an out and out freetrader and was the author of the Tariff bill carried through the 50th Congress. He was not considered a good speaker and debater when he entered Congress but has now developed into a first-class debater and orator feared by all his antagonists. He has very decided views upon free coinage,

but he has it seems, toned down in his last speeches, saying that the next Congress will be so fully occupied with different questions relating to the Mc

Kinley bill that little time will be left for debating Free Coinage. Mr. Mills is not a man of means having only had his salary for an income during his fifteen years of Congressional life.

A Wenham Fire Bug

Wenham is taking its turn with the Fire Bug. An incendiary attempt was made on Sunday night, it is believed to be the same fellow who has been operating in Beverly. At a late hour a man was discovered behind Tilton's barn, opposite Wenham church, in the act of lighting a newspaper. An alarm was quickly given and there was an exciting chase for the incendiary who ran for Wenham swamp. He succeeded in reaching the cover of the bushes and escaped though one of his pursuers got within 20 feet of him when he disappeared. This man wore a short leather jacket.

THE NEW BOSTON WEEKLY JOURNAL FOR THE YEAR 1892.

NEW FORM. PROGRESSIVE METHODS. ACCRESSIVE REPUBLICANISM.

The Leading Republican Newspaper of Boston and New England.

The Paper Fully Adapted to New England Readers.

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR, POSTAGE INCLUDED.

With all the claims of the Boston Weekly Journal that have been so fully set forth and so fairly recognized in the years past, this paper, in view of the great development that has been wrought since the last Prospectus, presents attractions for 1892 unequalled by those of any year in its history.

EIGHT PAGES, AND FIFTY-SIX COLUMNS,

now take the place of the Four Pages, with Thirty-Six Columns, which have been given to readers since the paper was first sent forth.

QUALITY AS WELL AS QUANTITY.

But the gain has not been merely in quantity, for the pages added, as well as the old ones have been enhanced in every department, and arrangements have been made for improving constantly their claims in the year 1892.

MECHANICAL FEATURES.

As to the mechanical improvements, the Boston Journal establishment has been equipped in the most thorough manner, from basement to upper story, with all the devices that modern enterprise and ingenuity suggest in order to furnish readers with the most rapidly produced and finely finished products of the press; and the facilities for multiplication of copies have been made to meet the great increase of demand which is confidently expected from the increased value given to the paper. Among the features of the year, growing in number and excellence of finish, will be illustrations, made expressly for the Journal, on themes that the most interesting phases of the news will warrant.

OUR GREETING TO OLD AND NEW.

With these material advantages supplementing those of the news and literary elements

the Boston Weekly Journal greets its old and new-found friends, assuring the former that no characteristic that has won their long attachment will be lost sight of, and promising the latter that nothing will be left undone to prove that their rapid accession so recently made to our ranks of readers should be lasting and progressive. The news and topics that are most vital to New England will, as heretofore, be presented to them, but not less faithfully will be given the well-proportioned outline of news from other sections and foreign lands.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN.

A central feature of news value for the year will be the Presidential Campaign, and in

What is

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhoea and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

Dr. G. C. Osgood,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

Dr. J. F. KINCHLOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

MRS. GEO. STEVENS

Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

The name of Bronson Howard as a playwright is known all over the land. It too, is an illustrious name in this respect. The pen of Mr. Howard has produced plays that have won him fame and fortune. But unquestionably no play of his reached greater renown or has been better received by the theatre-going thousands than "The Banker's Daughter."

It has been many seasons since Boston was given the opportunity to witness a first-class production of this truly realistic drama; but at Christmas time at this house it will be given in all its necessary detail, together with an exceptionally strong cast. The old lovers of the drama and those who have never before been fortunate in witnessing a proper presentation of "The Banker's Daughter," will at this time find their dramatic desires gratified in all that goes to make the drama complete and interesting.

The cast which has been carefully selected from among the best people in the dramatic profession is headed by Mr. Frank Losee, an actor who has won success wherever he has played. Mr. Losee assumes the important role of John Strebelow, a part that requires most discerning treatment.

Mr. Losee is well remembered in Boston, having played here in the "Soudan" throughout the long engagement of that place.

Miss Emily Rigi and Miss Effie Germon both well talented ladies, have important character parts, which it is said they do justice to. The rest of the people in the cast are well qualified to play the parts which have been assigned them.

"The Banker's Daughter" will be superbly staged, no detail having been omitted to make it complete.

BOSTON THEATRE.

"A Fair Rebel" after a successful engagement at the Boston Theatre closes its run tonight and on Monday the comedy—"Limited Mail" will be put on the boards.

PARK THEATRE.

Neil Burgess still pleases the audiences at the Park.

GLOBE THEATRE.

"Blue Jeans" by the original New York Company will be presented next week at the Globe Theatre. This comedy was presented last winter with universal approval.

BOSTON MUSEUM.

The charming comedy "A Sailors' Knot" which has pleased the crowded houses at the Museum for the past three weeks will continue the reigning success at that famous resort during Christmas week. Seats are selling rapidly for every performance especially for the Christmas matinee.

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE

Monday evening commences the engagement of Pitous Stock Company in "Geoffrey Middleton Gentlemen" at the Hollis Street Theatre. Tickets for the Christmas matinee are going fast.

"A Modern Match" is announced for the second week. This is Mr. Clyde Fitch's latest society drama, and naturally its presentation here by this combination will interest all Boston playgoers. It is reported that Mr. Fitch will attend the opening performance.

TREMONT THEATRE.

Rosina Vokes in her charming comedies will continue to please the patrons of the Tremont next week as she has during the past.

On the week of January fourth Mme. Sarah Bernhardt will appear in La Tosca Fedora, Camille and La Dame de Chantal.

COLUMBIA THEATRE.

"The Man With 100 Heads," the new farce with Mr. Henry E. Dixey at the head of a competent company of players, will be seen at the cosy Columbia on Monday night. The play has been highly approved by the New York Press and public. At any rate it will be pleasant to see Dixey in a new role. He may be relied upon to impersonate it earnestly and carefully, and his popularity is constantly increasing, he will surely have a warm welcome from a brilliant audience. The new piece is by one of the versatile Rosenfeld Brothers, whose exploits in the American amusements field with the Lilliputians, the Meiningen troupe and the Thalia, have astonished Native-born managers. Acted in Berlin some months ago the farce has since enjoyed steady success there, and is likely to make a very long run. The comical hero will be represented by Dixey, who will have to display all his cleverness of character for he will be required to impersonate a much varied role. The fun is in the easy and graceful order, with just a bit of flippancy, and is said to suit Dixey exactly. Preceding "The Man With 100 Heads" will be given "A Tangled Skein," a bright one act farce by Benjamin F. Rolder. For the support, Manager Charles Frohman has assigned from his vast forces Miss Virginia Buchanan, Miss Josephine Plow-Day, Isabella Evesson, Miss Maria Greenwald, Miss Fannie Cohen, Miss Belle Buckley, Mr. Louis Baker, Mr. Robert Hickman, Mr. Joseph Frankau and others.

Bird Slaughter in Florida.

The rush of tourists to Florida increases every winter, and so much shooting (every man nearly takes his gun) is rapidly diminishing the game all through the country.

The time was, and only a few years ago, when every bay and lagoon was teeming with birds, but when the fashion demanded that every woman's bonnet should be decorated with some kind of a bird or its feathers, men were sent to Florida to procure them, and one expedition returned, it is said, with one hundred thousand bird skins, shot during one winter. Such destruction is now felt, and although the authorities have now prohibited the slaughter, it is like locking the stable after the horse is stolen.

On the Apalachicola River wild turkeys and ducks are shot wantonly from the decks of the steamboats, and alligators all along the banks come in for a fusillade from the rifles of the passengers. On my recent trip on this river I saw numbers of turkeys shot as they were running along the banks, that were of course wasted, as the boat could not stop to pick them up; and every flock of ducks that rose was fired into, killing or maiming more or less of them. Not only on the ground of wanton cruelty should the owners of these boats prohibit the use of firearms, but it is a great annoyance to many passengers to have rifles and shotguns banging away around them, to say nothing of the danger to life from careless use of guns by mere boys, as some of them were. It is a theme the Forest and Stream might properly bring to the notice of the proper authorities (the owners of the steamers) in the case, and enter a protest against such wanton destruction of such rare game as the turkey, as well as every other bird coming in for slaughter, as is now the case on the river boats on the Southern rivers.—Forest and Stream.

I don't care much for that headline, Divers Topics, said Blittus. Why not change it to Sub Marine Notes, suggested Wilkes.

Money is trouble, sighed old banker. No, it isn't either! exclaimed young Banker. You can easily borrow trouble.

Fire at the Press Office.

At 12.40 o'clock Tuesday noon, Tim Connors, a lad employed at this office, went down into the boiler room when he discovered a lively blaze in a large bin of waste paper which is situated in the boiler room, several feet from the furnace door and entirely out of the range of sparks or hot cinders that may at times issue from the open door. What caused the fire is a mystery, as great care is exercised to keep all matter out of the bin that might ignite spontaneously.

The young man upon seeing the flames set about at once single handed, to battle them by rolling in the mass of burning rubbish. Finding his efforts unavailing, he ran for his overcoat and tried with that to stifle the fire, but to no purpose. At length, he hailed a man who chanced to pass through the yard and asked him to guard the premises while he ran and rang in an alarm at the Central Fire Station which is within 200 feet of this office. The man appeared to be afraid to risk himself in that situation, however, and instead of standing by to direct the firemen when they got there, or render any assistance followed the boy upstairs. An alarm was promptly pulled in by Mr. Smart and the apparatus was on hand as soon as possible after the alarm sounded and five lines of hose poured a deluge of water into the building which was already filled with a black smoke, so dense that it was impossible to discern anything and consequently much water was thrown into the building after the fire was practically quenched. The principal damage was done by water, and when the smoke had sufficiently cleared away to admit of entrance, a scene of desolation was presented that was appalling. Type cases were overturned and their contents "piled," debris of every description strewn the floors and all was chaotic confusion. Water stood six inches deep upon the lower floor, and an incessant down pour came from the floors above.

Mr. Thomas L. D. Perkins, who conducts a retail grocery in the basement, suffered a loss estimated at $500, by water that found its way through the floors and wet his goods, and D. B. Lord who has a quantity of piping and fittings stored in the rear of the basement also suffered considerable loss.

The principal damage to the building, which belongs to the Dustin estate, was from broken windows and water soaked plastering, the actual loss by burning being confined to the wood work in the boiler room.

The Peabody Press Co., carried an insurance of $6,000, placed through the agencies of O. B. Chadwick and Albert H. Merrill. The insurance on the building being placed through Salem agents as was that carried by Mr. Perkins. Mr. Lord was insured through Chadwick & Co. The insurance of all the parties is ample to cover the loss sustained, although much resultant damage will have to be borne by the occupants of the building by interruption to business.

In August, 1890, a similar fire originated in the same part of the building at 10 o'clock at night which did about $600 worth of damage to the Press Company and the owners of the building, besides some destruction to the grocery stock of Mr. Perkins, which at that time was not covered by insurance.

A MYSTERIOUS DEATH.

John Doherty, an employe at the Alms House, found unconscious and dying on Foster street.

Shortly after one o'clock this morning as Officer McManus was returning to the station house he was met by four men, whose names are James Frame, Henry Lawrence, Thomas Welch and Richard Horrigan, members of one of the clubs in Blaney block on Foster street, who informed him that a man had just been discovered by them lying in the gutter in front of the building where the club room is located. Officers Carlin, Wiggins and McManus repaired to the spot and found the prostrate body of John Doherty, a young man somewhat under thirty years of age, for a long time an inmate of the Alms House and for several months an employe there, in the gutter at the point indicated, unconscious and bleeding. The injured man was conveyed to the station in a team procured at Linehan's stable, and Dr. C. C. Pike was hastily summoned, who found the man unconscious and dying from the effects of a severe fracture of skull extending over and back of the right temple. The injury was of such a nature as necessarily to prove fatal, and little could be done for the unfortunate man. He was therefore allowed to rest upon a couch in the station and at about five o'clock expired.

Chief Peasley was notified of the affair and rising from his slumbers, repaired to the station and at once set about to discover if possible the cause of the dying man's injuries.

Medical Examiner, Dr. George S. Osborne was summoned to view the remains soon after dissolution, and found from a casual examination that death resulted from the fracture above referred to, but it is impossible to determine how the blow was received.

Officer M. H. Grady had been at the corner of Foster and Lowell street just before the body was found, and heard a noise that proceeded from the locality where Doherty was found, but supposed at the time it was somebody who had returned with a team, rattling the stable door at Linehan's.

Private watchman Donovan who goes the rounds of a number of factories on Foster street, says he heard several people pass the spot where the body was found five or ten minutes before the officers arrived, which would indicate that Doherty had not been lying there long when picked up.

The case is a deep mystery. Some think the man went into the building intoxicated and fell out of the second story window which was open, while others think he may have fallen or been pushed down stairs. The skin was not broken at the point of fracture, which to some indicates that he was struck with a heavy, blunt instrument, although the doctors say the fracture may have been produced by falling heavily upon the edge of the curbstone without breaking the skin.

The man bled more or less, but mostly from the left ear and nostril.

Burglary at Mr. Flint's.

At 2 o'clock Christmas morning burglars entered the cellar of Hanley Flint's residence on Walnut street through a rear window and an attempt was made to force a passage upstairs but failed. Upon the stairs and other places were prints of a foot of large size indicating that the work was that of adults and not boys. Failing to effect a passage to the main part of the house the burglars took a quantity of pies and a quarter of cooked mutton and broke and bedabbled them with dirt.

Mr. Flint seems to be particularly unfortunate in being so often the object of thieves. It is but a week today since the foot pads who recently robbed him were locked up.

Forefather's Day.

Forefather's day was observed Monday by the Congregational Club at Salem with special services. There was a large attendance of members and invited guests, and supper was served. Beverly and an address was made by President Clark, Mr. Ewing of Danvers and others and a letter was read from Kate T. Woods President of the Thought and Work Club.

The following gentlemen were elected to membership: John T. Cassino of Peabody, Geo. R. Lord Jr., and Walter B. Abbott of Salem, Fred H. Wallis of Beverly, and Wm. H. Colby Lewis E. Nickerson and Albert W. Tarr of Rockport. Six candidates were proposed for members.

Death of Senator Plumb.

Senator Plumb of Kansas died at his home in Washington last Sunday forenoon of a shock of apoplexy. He was taken about 6 o'clock in the morning and expired a few hours later.

His sudden and unlooked demise caused much grief at the capital and in Kansas. He had been in the United States Senate some 15 years and was a leader of it. He was an honest man and always loyal to the best interests of the Nation.

Overwork killed Senator Plumb. He had an iron constitution and therefore though he could stand all that could be piled on his shoulders. But he was mistaken. He died in the harness, and thus are the great men of the country dropping off.

Shoots from thine orbit across our way,
No ghost of thine vexes content supreme,
We only remember thee as a dream!

PARLOR COMEDIANS.

The Countess Flavia Andorni was charming, twenty-eight years of age, 40,000 lire of income as her dowry and she did not take a husband. Every now and then she refused one. Countess Flavia read a great deal, she invented the fashions which the elegant women imitated, she did not attend first representations at the theater, but preferred second performances; she did not care for poetry, did not use paint or powder, never was ill, journeyed very often, allowed herself to be courted up to a certain limit, never talked politics, liked the conversation of men better than that of women, had gray eyes, dark complexion and brown hair.

Therefore she was called—rightly or wrongly—I have nothing to say about that—a woman of esprit.

The Marquis Ernesto Carafa, thirty-two years old, had a handsome head, with a tawny blond mane, a short, aristocratic, tawny beard, 60,000 lire of income and not a sign of a wife. He paid court to all the ladies with a certain graceful nonchalance, danced while others were playing cards, did not cultivate the acquaintance of the corps de ballet, drove his horses himself, did not wear a flower in his buttonhole, did not patronize the fine arts, did not care for music, lent money to his intimate friends, did not aspire to be elected deputy to Rome, loved the mountains like a platonic member of the Alpine club, had no literary proclivities, never wrote love letters, was always in love and never in love. Rightly or wrongly, Ernesto Carafa was called a man of esprit.

These two exceptional beings began, naturally, like others, their acquaintance. Some friend of Flavia said to her, "That Carafa is really a brilliant man; why don't you have him presented to you?" And Ernesto's friends: "Do you know the Countess Andorni? A brilliant woman, my dear fellow." And this thrice four times, twenty times, so that Flavia was bored and Ernesto annoyed by it. They saw each other on a promenade and looked at each other with ill-concealed curiosity like two rare beasts, but the countess discovered nothing extraordinary and the marquis shrugged his shoulders for the same reason.

One evening at the San Carlo, the marquis was presented to the countess, in her box, by a friend. Few words were exchanged, and those of the simplest, of the kind that are not in the vocabulary of people of esprit. Ernesto went away soon, smiling ironically upon manufactured fames, and Flavia asked herself if she must add another name to the category of foolish and useless beings already so large among her acquaintances. So when they met—at the theater, in society, at festivals, on the promenade—they exchanged a rather disdainful bow, without seeking to approach each other or to become better acquainted.

But chance—that, far from being a person of esprit, has obstinacies which are quite stupid—made them meet and remain near each other, perforce, at the marriage of a cousin of Flavia with a friend of Ernesto. They resigned themselves to endure each other mutually. Each one thought how to sustain the character attributed to her and to him, in order not to make a poor figure; and there ensued a conversation of paradoxes, retorts, bizarre questions, odd answers, stupendous absurdities, a display of fireworks that ended by bewildering the two pyrotechnicians and putting them into a state of nervousness foreign to their habits. "What a witty and disagreeable man! but I kept up with him," said Flavia when she was alone. "A witty and disagreeable woman; but I was not left behind her," murmured the marquis.

Yet the marquis went with some frequency to the house of the countess, and the countess received him with polite cordiality. Both perceived that the people around them enjoyed the relations that united the most witty man and woman in the city; they perceived the slight smiles, the curious attention, with which others sought to take part in their colloquies; the care with which was reported a witticism said by Flavia to Ernesto, or vice versa; in short, they perceived that they were treated by the public as star actors. Were they conscious of playing a part or of speaking the truth? That is the dark point which I shall not illuminate, but it is certain that the little comedy continued, recited with liveliness and much interest. Belonging to the far from numerous class of brilliant people, the two sought to do precisely the opposite of whatever all the others did.

Ernesto had at the very first declared that he would never, never pay court to the countess, and the countess had added that she forbade him to fall in love with her, which is quite the reverse of paying court. Ernesto never sent flowers to Flavia, and she never asked him for confidences, as is customary between friends. The marquis never felt himself obliged to praise the arrangement of the hair, the eyes or the arms of the countess, and the countess avoided speaking of him with her friends. On the subject of love they were in accord; they spoke equally ill and well of it, skimming the topic lightly, of course making witticisms. Upon matrimony it was the same. They never became tender, never were melancholy or pensive. They always feared to talk sentiment after the manner of the crowd. They never hazarded artistic discussions, never discoursed of poetry.

All ready made phrases were banished—all conventionalisms, axioms, sentences, classic quotations, lines of poetry, newspaper diction, things that everybody repeats because everybody has begun by saying them. I do not speak of proverbs; they were rigorously prohibited. At first for awhile they amused themselves by citing proverbs upside down, at the cost of causing a shudder to the mighty Solomon and all other collectors of proverbial philosophy; but it was a jest that soon became common, and they let it go. The marquis was always upon guard, fearing to see a smile of scorn appear upon the beautiful mouth of the countess for some involuntary offense against esprit on his part. And on the other hand the countess was wary as to her words, blushing to be caught in a moment of weakness in which she should resemble too much any other woman.

But by too great subservience to their reputation, Flavia and Ernesto began to become rather tiresome; that is to say, not to themselves, but to the people who frequented them. It is natural that brilliant people have many exactions, it is natural that they live a life different from that of the multitude. For example, when they met at a ball, Ernesto saluted the countess and spoke with her for one moment, then took a little turn and came back to say something to her, without even stopping long, but returning often, and people around said that he was right to do so, because she alone could understand him. They frequently danced together for the same reason—and the other admirers of the witty countess were left badly off, disappointed of the mazurka or quadrille hoped for in vain. When Flavia went away the marquis moved about the rooms for a little while longer with a bored air; then put on his overcoat and departed because he had no longer any one to talk with.

At the theater Ernesto remained much longer than was his duty in her box, for it is very common to make short visits to ladies. If some poor mortal, in form of a dark youth in a dress coat, marmoreally polished shirt front and the relative crush hat, presented himself to the Countess Flavia—if this unhappy but contemptible young man dared venture the customary compliments—an impertinent little laugh stirred the lips of the marquis and a cutting reply came from the rosy mouth of the countess. The result was the precipitate flight of the young man. There was a rumor that the Marquis Ernesto had paid assiduous court to the young Duchess Cesira Galbati, a very beautiful young woman, tall, with staturesse outlines, great Junonian eyes, long golden hair, a flower of womanhood, but in the way of intelligence, a goose of the ingenious and conscientious sort; well, it was to be supposed that the Countess Flavia had exploded more than one epigram at the marquis, for he ceased to hover around the Duchess Cesira.

Again, the countess and the marquis had reserved to themselves the privilege of many, very many strange ideas, which they never failed to put in to execution. When all the stream of carriages was at the Riviera di Chiaia, Flavia made hers turn by the corner of Piedigotta and go by the Corso Vittorio Emanuele; Ernesto described a circle, went by way of the Toledo and the Salvatore Rosa and came to meet her. In the winter season, in midst of the amusements, festivals, balls, Flavia fled away all alone to Sorrento, and after three days Ernesto appeared there, bored by the city. At first Flavia had a reception day, then annulled it, seeing that all the other women, her friends, had one, and also because the marquis made fun of days.

The marquis had lost his inveterate habit of going to hunt every year in Calabria. So, little by little, a certain isolation was made around them; the world confessed aloud that in those two was contained the entire wit of Naples, but added, sotto voce, that it was better to leave the two models of wit to fight it out between themselves. Flavia and Ernesto did not perceive this, and when the tardy moment came, in which they found themselves alone, one facing the other, it seemed to them a very simple thing. The public had withdrawn itself—but not in vain was the invention of art for art's sake.

One evening, be it known, in autumn the conversation between those two languished, exhausted. Not that they found nothing more to say, but a certain sense of weariness descended upon them. All the evening their wit had sparkled brilliantly, and the charming epigram, delicate ironies, courteous implications, biting amiabilities had showered unintermittently. Now they were silent. The countess extended herself slightly in her armchair; she was adorable under the quiet lamplight; but the marquis, while recognizing this fact, had the good taste not to speak of it. He was playing with a mother of pearl pen handle.

"Marriage is a very fine thing," he murmured, with a pretended air of conviction.

"For the unmarried, yes," the countess quickly retorted.

And she adjusted her lace cravat. Ernesto took a book from the table, read the title and laid it down again.

"Do you know what they say down there about us?"

"I do not know. And I do not care to know."

"Then 'tis a sign that I ought to tell you. Many of our mutual friends are agreed in the opinion that we two are persons of too much wit ever to marry each other."

"Bah!" said the countess, shrugging her shoulders.

"If in order to prove ourselves witty we should do just the contrary. What do you say, countess? It would be charming!" and he opened the Pungolo newspaper to read the locals.

"Charming, indeed," she replied, putting out her hand to take her fan. Translated from the Italian of Matilde Serao by E. Cavazza for Short Stories.

Many condemn the use of perfume as vulgar, but as long as we have wives and sisters and daughters and sweethearts the industry will flourish.

HOLIDAY HINTS.

Acceptable Presents in Attractive Articles Novel, Useful and Easily Made.

The lengthening evenings afford a good opportunity for work to those who like to make their preparations for Christmas living in a leisurely way, and a few hints as to what is new in fancy work and in articles pretty, useful and easily made are therefore given.

For elderly people or invalids cushions of every description are acceptable presents; for cushion work forms all sorts of scraps of silk and satin may be used. The bolster shape of cushion is popular for the back of chairs.

In fancy pin cushions there are various shapes. A square shape, covered with satin and edged with cord, having occasionally a little embroidery introduced, looks well; or the same shape covered with embroidery. There is another style, called the Siamese twins, with one square over the other, like a French pouf ottoman. The bolster form also finds favor, or the sack cushion made of various colored silks; sometimes three of different colors are tied together.

An umbrella case or case for holding traveling wraps is a useful present. The best material to use is gray ticking, which can be embroidered upon in fancy stitches with colored wools, silks or narrow braiding, thus making it ornamental, and the name of the recipient may also be added if desired.

A fan photograph holder is a pretty and convenient thing. First cover a palm leaf fan with cotton wadding and then with silk. Then cover a semicircle of cardboard in the same way and insert it in the handle. The photographs are slipped between this and the actual fan. An ordinary fan has the semicircular strip inserted above the ribs and the photographs are ranged in a line.

Bags for holding fancy work, worsteds or odds and ends, are of colored satin or pretty cretonne. A desirable size is about sixteen inches wide and fourteen deep, with a fall of deep lace below the draw string. Attractive bags for soiled linen, thirty-four inches long and twenty-one inches wide, with a deep hem reaching almost to the draw string, of coarse linen, are powdered over with stars or detached daisies of good size. The outline of the flower is of one shade, and the filling in, which is merely herring boning from side to side of the petal, of another. This is very quick, easy and effective work.

An ordinary berry basket is trimmed up to make an attractive hanging catchall; it is lined with cashmere or any pretty material and covered outside with satin; a flat box of ribbon ornaments the middle of each of the four sides; the end of a ribbon is fastened as a bow on each corner of the basket and the basket is suspended by these four ribbons, which are brought together and tied.

One of the newest ideas in crochet is making small butterflies, sprigs of flowers and other designs to be applique to the corners of tea cloths, sideboard cloths and similar pieces of work, either by themselves or introduced among embroidery. To carry these out successfully it is essential that the work should be executed tightly and evenly, and that the finest thread only be used. When delicately crocheted these are adapted to mounting in the corners of pocket handkerchiefs. Sprays and wreaths of this fine work look well if mounted upon photograph frames, handkerchief sachets or workbags, made of colored velvet, satin or plush.

Small Points in Carving.

A fillet of veal should be sliced from the top, a loin of veal from the small end. Tongue and ham should be cut very thin; the center slices of tongue are considered the best.

All meats should be placed on comfortably large dishes, as lack of room prevents graceful carving.

The guests should express a preference for rare or well done, the carver giving some of the tenderloin to each.

A sirloin of beef should be laid with the tenderloin down, cut in thin slices, then turn and cut the other side.

The best parts of fish lie near the head. If there is any roe put a part on each plate. Be careful in serving fish not to break it. A fish knife or a knife with a broad blade is the best.

French Polishing.

This work is not beyond the powers of amateurs; it is, however, one requiring considerable time and patience, and demanding practice at the start. First of all, the surface of the wood should be well rubbed with fine glass paper, and the dust from this removed. A sort of cushion or pad is then made with flannel; this must be thoroughly wetted with French polish, a clean piece of linen or muslin stretched over it, and a drop of linseed oil applied to the face. With this, polish in circles with light but regular pressure, this process to be repeated at intervals until the requisite polish is obtained. Ordinary French polish will do for experiments, but it darkens the color of wood or stain; therefore colorless polish is essential for delicate work.

A Simple and Useful Little Gift.

A hint to Christmas workers is represented in the illustration of a handkerchief case, here reproduced from The Decorator and Furnisher. This case is nine inches square and the foundation is of pink satin. Over this is placed a crocheted cover of white shetland wool made in a loose, open stitch. The edge is finished with a crocheted scallop, and this is tipped with pink knitting silk. Where the opening in the center is, the satin is used as a facing and left to show.

A HANDKERCHIEF CASE.

Bows of ribbon are used to finish this simple and useful little gift.

Almond Pastry.

Pound three ounces of almonds, one-quarter pound of butter, two ounces of sugar, with a little rose water till it becomes a thick paste. Spread it on a buttered tin, bake in a slow oven. When cold divide it into eight pieces, put a spoonful of preserve on each piece, and cover with whipped cream.

It Cures Colds, Coughs, Sore Throat, Croup, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis and Asthma. A certain cure for Consumption in first stage, and a sure relief in advanced stages. Use at once. You will see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Sold by dealers everywhere. Large bottles, 50 cents and $1.00.

The smallest is the best in pills, other things being equal. But with Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, nothing else is equal.

They're the best, not only because they're the smallest, and the easiest to take—but because they do more good. They cleanse and regulate the liver, stomach and bowels in a way the huge, old-fashioned pill doesn't dream of. Think of trying to regulate the system with the ordinary pill. It's only good for upsetting it.

These are mild and gentle—but thorough and effective, no pain—no griping. One little pellet for a laxative—three for a cathartic. The best Liver Pill known. Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels are prevented, relieved and cured.

Put up in sealed vials—a perfect vest-pocket remedy, always convenient, fresh and reliable.

They're the cheapest pill you can buy for your money is returned. It's a plan of sale peculiar to Dr. Pierce's medicines.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT

27 LOWELL ST., - PEABODY, MASS.

PEABODY PRESS CO., PUBLISHERS.

TERMS:

$2.00 per year; $1.00 for six months;
50 cents for three months.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1891.

THE PRESS wishes its readers a happy new year and trusts that most of them enjoyed Christmas.

NOTWITHSTANDING THE confusion, damage and delay caused by the fire on Tuesday, we are pleased to issue the present number on time as usual.

THE MUGWUMP and democratic press of the country is wasting a good deal of time just now, in trying to convince the public and themselves that Secretary Blaine is about ready to surrender, if not to the "grim messenger," to general debility, and leave the Presidential honors for others to fight over.

They don't know the vitality and reserve forces the gentleman possesses.

THE MARBLEHEAD Messenger this week has a lengthy editorial on "Protection." That kind of protection which Henry George in his treatise of the subject, sneers at.—Protection of the town merchants against the competition of tradesmen in surrounding cities.

It contains some excellent logic, and some advice to those who spend their money out of town, and holds up a mirror for some of the townspeople to see themselves in while not condemning Salem merchants for being smart enough to catch the trade.

WITH OUR next issue begins the thirty-third volume, and we shall enter upon the new year with plenty of good resolutions and a much increased subscription list. We thank our patrons and subscribers for the support we have received in the past and shall endeavor to merit a continuance of favors for the year to come.

It is gratifying to see our efforts of the past year appreciated, as evidenced by the large increase of new subscribers within the year, and particularly the numbers added during the month of December current. It is always encouraging to the management of any kind of business to feel that the enterprise is sustained by public opinion and liberal patronage, and in the case of a newspaper the moral support is of especial value to the management, to say nothing of the benefits that result directly or indirectly to those who contribute to that support.

A newspaper without subscribers is the most dismal of failures, not only to those whose money and energy are invested in the enterprise, but to the community in which it is published. It carries no weight of opinion and is a cipher in the affairs of local government or commercial success while the paper that is backed by the support and subscriptions of its townspeople is a potent factor in developing the moral, social, industrial and political resources of the community.

We thank our patrons, therefore, again for supporting the PRESS and thereby aiding in maintaining and developing the town.

ESSEX COUNTY.

Rev. Parvye LeB. Cross accepts the call to the Church of the Incarnation (Episcopal) at Lynn.

Rev. F. B. Noyes of Athol was on Tuesday installed pastor of the Second Congregational church at West Newbury.

There was a collision between a car and team in Marblehead during the fog on Tuesday evening, but no serious damage resulted.

The residence and stable of James E. Martin at Methuen were burned on Sunday night. There was no water available. Loss $6000—half insured.

The Searles will case was before the Supreme Court this week, Judge Endicott moving for an extension of time to file cross interrogatories to Mrs. Newman of Omaha; the time was extended to December 29.

Among this week's patents are the following: Francis O. Blackwell, Lynn; guard for trolley wire insulators; Wm. C. Goss, assignor of one-half to Edwin L. Hill, Lynn, fire protecting apparatus for buildings; Michael Hagarty, Salisbury, rule.

William Christie, employed at the Thomson-Houston works in Lynn, lost the last train from Salem to Lynn on Saturday night, and went over on a freight train. He jumped off at Pleasant street crossing and his left arm went under the wheels. It was amputated close to the shoulder.

HOME.

A little room with scanty grace
Of drapery or ordered ease,
White dainty and well scrubbed boards—
But there's a hum of laden bees
And sunshine in the quiet place,
And scent that honeysuckle hoards.

Outside, the little garden glows
With sun warmed leaves and blossoms bright;
Beyond lie pasture, elm, and wood
Where trail the briony and wild rose.
Where glow the blossoms of delight
In an inviolate solitude.

Through that green land there blows an air
That cools my forehead even here
In this sad city's riotous roar,
And from that little room I hear
The echo of a life long prayer,
And the world's voice is heard no more.

—E. Nesbit in Leisure Hour.

A HIGHWAYMAN'S JULIET

The house in question was what Peter the Scholar (who corrects my proof sheets) calls one of the rustic sort—the front facing a street and the back looking over a turfed garden, with a lime tree or two, a laburnum, and a lawn tennis court marked out, its white lines plain to see in the starlight. At the end of the garden a door, painted dark green, led into a narrow lane between high walls, where, if two persons met, one had to turn sideways to let the other pass. The entrance to this lane was cut in two by a wooden post about the height of your hip, and just beyond this, in the high road, George was waiting for us with the dog cart.

We had picked the usual time—the dinner hour. It had just turned dark and the church clock, two streets away, was chiming the quarter after eight when Peter and I let ourselves in by the green door I spoke of and felt along the wall for the gardener's ladder that we knew was hanging there. A simpler job there never was. The bedroom window on the first floor stood right open to the night air, and inside was a faint candlelight flickering, just as a careless maid will leave them after her mistress has gone down to dinner. To be sure, there was a chance of her coming back to put them out, but we could hear her voice going in the servants' hall as we lifted the ladder and rested it against the sill.

"She's good for half an hour yet," Peter whispered, holding the ladder while I began to climb; "but if I hear her voice stop, I'll give the signal to be cautious."

I went up softly, pushed my head gently above the level of the sill and looked in.

It was a roomy place, with a great half tester bed, hung with curtains, standing out from the wall on my right. The curtains were of chintz, a dark background, with flaming red poppies sprawling over it, and the farther curtain hid the dressing table and the candles upon it and the jewel case that I confidently hoped to stand upon it also. A bright Brussels carpet covered the floor, and the wall paper, I remember—though, for the life of me, I can not tell why—was a pale gray ground, worked up to imitate watered silk, with sprigs of gilt honeysuckle upon it.

I looked around and listened for half a minute. The house was still as death up here—not a sound in the room or in the passages beyond. With a nod to Peter to hold the ladder firm I lifted one leg over the sill, then the other, dropped my feet carefully upon the thick carpet and went quickly around the bed to the dressing table.

But at the corner, and as soon as ever I saw around the chintz curtain, my knees gave way, and I put out a hand toward the bedpost.

Before the dressing table, and in front of the big glass in which she could see my white face, was an old lady seated.

She wore a blaze of jewels and a low gown, out of which rose the scraggiest neck and shoulders I have ever looked on. Her hair was thick with black dye and fastened with a diamond star. Between the two candles the powder showed on her cheek bones like flour on a miller's coat. Chin on hand, she was gazing steadily into the mirror before her, and, even in my fright, I had time to note that a glass of sherry and a plate of rice and curry stood at her elbow among the rouge pots and powder puffs.

While I stood stock still and pretty well scared out of my wits, she rose, still staring at my image in the glass, folded her hands modestly over her bosom, and spoke in a deep, tragical voice:

"The prince!"

Then, facing sharply around, she held out her thin arms.

"You have come—at last?"

There was not much to say to this except that I had. So I confessed it. Even with the candles behind her I could see her eyes glowing like a dog's, and an uglier poor creature this world could scarcely show.

"Is the ladder set against the window?"

"Since you seem to know, ma'am," said I, "it is."

"Ah, Romeo! Your cheeks are ruddy—your poppies are too red."

"Then I'm glad my color's come back; for, to tell the truth, you did give me a turn just at first. You were looking out for me, no doubt?"

"My prince!" She stretched out her arms again, and being pretty well at my wits' end, I let her embrace me. "It has been so long," she said, "oh, the weary while! And they ill treat me. Where have you been all this tedious time?"

I was not going to answer that, you may be sure. By this I had recovered myself sufficiently to guess what was near the truth—that this was a mad aunt of the family below, and that the game was in my hands if I played with decent care. So I met her question with another.

"Look here," I said, "I'm running a considerable risk in braving these persecutors of your'n. Hadn't we better elope at once?"

"I am ready."

"And the jewels? You won't leave them to your enemies, I suppose."

She turned to the dressing table, lifted her jewel case and put it into my hands.

"I am ready," she repeated; "let us be quick and stealthy as death."

She followed me to the window and, looking out, drew back.

"What horrible, black depths!"

"It's as easy," said I, "as pie. You could do it on your head—look here." I climbed out first and helped her, setting her feet on the rungs. We went down in silence, I choking all the way at the sight of Peter below, who was looking with his mouth open and his lips too weak to meet the curses and wonderment that rose up from the depths of him. When I touched turf and handed him the jewel case he took it like a man in a trance.

We put the ladder back in its place and stole over the turf together. But outside the garden door Peter could stand no more of it.

"I've a firearm in my pocket," whispered he, pulling up, "and I'm going to fire it off to relieve my feelings, if you don't explain here and now. Who, in pity's name, is she?"

"You mug—she's the Original Sleeping Beauty. I'm eloping with her, and you've got her jewels."

"Pardon me, Jem," he says, in his gentlemanly way, "if I don't quite see. Are you taking her off to melt her or marry her? For how to get rid of her else?"

The poor old creature had halted, too, three paces ahead of us, and waited while we whispered, with the moonlight, that slanted down into the lane, whitening her bare neck and flashing on her jewels.

"One moment," I said, and stepped forward to her; "you had better take off those ornaments here, my dear, and give them to my servant to take care of. There's a carriage waiting for us at the end of the lane, and when he has stowed them under the seat we can climb in and drive off!"

"To the end of the world—to the very rim of it, my hero."

She pulled the gems from her ears, hair and bosom and handed them to Peter, who received them with a bow. Next she searched in her pocket and drew out a tiny key. Peter unlocked the case, and, having carefully stowed the diamonds inside, locked it again, handed back the key, touched his hat and walked off toward the dogcart.

"My dearest lady," I began, as soon as we were alone between the high walls, "if the devotion of a life!"

Her bare arm crept into mine. "There is but a little time left for us in which to be happy. Year after year I have marked off the almanac; day by day I have watched the dial. I saw my sisters married and my sisters' daughters; and still I waited. Each had a man to love her and tend her, but none had such a man as I would have chosen. They were none like you, my prince."

"No, I dare say not."

"Oh, but my heart is not so cold. Take my hand—it is firm and strong touch my lips—they are burning!"

A low whistle sounded at the top of the lane. As I took her hands I pushed her back, and turning ran for my life. I suppose that as I ran I counted forty before her scream came, and then the sound of her feet pattering after me.

She must have run like a demon, for I was less than ten yards ahead when Peter caught my wrist and pulled me up onto the back seat of the dogcart. And before George could set the horse going her hand clutched at the flap on which my feet rested. It missed its grasp and she never got near enough again. But for half a minute I looked into that horrible face following us and working with silent rage; and for half a mile at least I heard the patter of her feet in the darkness behind. Indeed, I can hear it now.—Q. in Argonaut.

Renting Flowers for Funerals.

"What an ideal! Bless you, florists are bad enough, but they have not yet stooped so low as to hire out flowers for funerals." Thus spoke a Fifth Avenue dealer in fancy nosegays the other day.

"But you loan doves to undertakers sometimes?"

"Yes, and to the churches on special occasions; but loaning flowers for a funeral, why, it is simply preposterous!"

"It is said to be done every day in this city."

"Yes, there are dealers in artificial flowers who do that business, but not florists."

I visited the largest artificial flower and foliage concern in the city.

"A great many poor people," said a member of the firm, "order potted flowers and tropical plants of us for funerals. We charge 10 per cent. for their use, and in many instances the flowers might better have been purchased out and out. Take our foliage bouquets, composed of begonias, colons, geraniums and ivy—

they come cheap, and it is poor economy to hire them. But people of small means like the immediate saving, and the long run is not taken into account. For church funerals we sell large quantities of chrysanthemums, roses, tiger and calla lilies, hyacinths, etc. Natural flowers are sometimes represented on the same altar, and it is impossible to tell which is which." —New York Herald.

A Remarkable Black Walnut.

Ohio is a remarkable state for nuts. A new kind of black walnut has been discovered out there which is probably destined to be highly prized in the future. By a freak of nature one-half of its shell is not developed, nor the kernel on that side, the result being a pear shaped nut filled with a single meat somewhat the shape of a peanut, though bigger. The important objection to ordinary black walnuts is that they are divided in the middle by a wall of shell so constructed that it is almost impossible to get the kernel out whole. This freak variety has only to be cracked to yield the meat entire. It is to be cultivated, and may be expected to appear on the market by the time that the present generation of babies is grown up.—Washington Star.

A Feather in His Cap.

This phrase, signifying honor and distinction, arose from the custom prevalent among the ancient Syrians, and perpetuated to this day among the various savage or semi-civilized tribes of Asia and America, of adding a new feather to their head gear for every enemy slain. In the days of chivalry the young knight received his casque featherless, and won his plumes as he had won his spurs. In a manuscript written by Richard Hansard in 1598, and preserved in the British museum, it is said of the Hungarians that it had been an ancient custom among them that none should wear a feather but he who had killed a Turk, and to such only it was lawful to show the number of feathers in their caps. In Scotland and Wales it is still customary for the sportsmen who kill their first woodcock to pluck out a feather and stick it in his cap.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

Ione Dunham, one of the pretty girls in the "La Cigale" has fallen heir to $125,000 in Elмира.

The trial for two weeks of Anson Phelps Pond's new play "A Desperate Man," having proved very successful, the play will now be booked for a regular season beginning in February.

Isabella Evesson has joined Manager Charles Frohman's Company, and will travel with Henry E. Dixey.

The next play Mr. Chas. H. Hoyt will write after "A Temperance Town" is produced, has been named "A Man Born in Missouri."

Charles Wyndman has received Bronson Howard's "Saratoga" ("Brighton") at the Criterion Theatre, London.

Count De La Miranda, husband of Christine Nilsson, has been appointed Spanish Ambassador to the court of Sweden and Norway, and thus the great singer will be an ambassador's wife in the city in which she entered a poor girl with bare feet. Mme. Nilsson is to be received with special honors.

"Sinbad" continues to attract tremendous audiences to Manager David Henderson's Chicago Opera. It is the biggest success that Manager Henderson has yet had and could run out the entire season.

Mr. Joseph Haworth has been immensely successful in the South where he is at present coining money.

Harry Lacy, the star of "Jack Royal of the 92d" was taken ill while playing in Philadelphia recently. Mr. Lacy had been rehearsing a greatly revised version (by John A. Stevens) of "Jack Royal," and it was his intention to open in the play at New York, but his illness delayed the rehearsals, and he continued the old play.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

"The Bottom of the Sea" a unique drama, of transcendent brilliancy in scenic effects, will be presented at the Grand Opera House New Years week only, Matinees will be held Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

When the play was announced last year for the Globe Theatre it was hailed with many pleasant encomiums and encouraging lines from the press of Boston.

TREMONT THEATRE.

Next week will be the third and last of the engagement at the Tremont of Rosina Vokes and her talented associates, for which charming comedienne was selected one of her most successful and delightful triple bills. The performance will begin with "In Honor Bound," a petite drama, in one act, by Sidney Grundy, in which Mr. Courtenay Thope gives one of his best impersonations. This will be followed by the clever comedietta, by Mrs. Charles Doremus, entitled "The Circus Rider," in which Mrs. Vokes will give her wonderful imitation of a queen of the sawdust arena riding a fiery, untamed steed. The concluding number will be J. B. Buckstone's masterpiece, "The Rough Diamond," with Miss Vokes as the kind-hearted Margery and Mrs. Morris as Cousin Joe, the good natured country lout.

The illustrious artiste, Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, will appear at the Tremont Theatre the week of January 4, for six nights and one matinee (Saturday). She will first be seen in "Theodora," on Monday night; on Tuesday night "La Tosca" will be presented; on Wednesday probably—the new play, "La Dame de Châlons"; on Friday, either "Leah" (for the first time by Mme. Bernhardt on any stage) or "Frou Frou"; for Saturday Matinee, "Joanne D'Arc" (first time here); and Saturday evening, "Pauline Blanchard" (also first time in Boston.) All the plays will be made superb productions in the way of scenic effects and costumes. The Monday and Tuesday nights' plays are fixed as above; the remainder of the week probably as announced, with possible changes. There will, however, be seven distinct plays for the seven performances, and no repetition.

DANA'S SARSAPARILLA is guaranteed to absolutely cure disease, and it does it too.

LITERARY NOTES.

The Salem Historic Calendar for 1892, a concise record of important events in the history of Salem, has been issued from the office of the Salem Press.

Salem Witchcraft in outline by Mrs. O. W. H. Upham, published by the Salem Press Company is an interesting, accurate, concise and instructive volume and in the neat form it is bound up, makes a very pretty holiday gift for a moderate outlay. Sidney Peile's "Historical Storms" is another readable volume.

As the sun is superior to the stars, so DANA'S is superior to all other Sarsaparillas.

John T. Cassino was elected a member of the Congregational Club at the meeting held on Monday—Forefathers' day, and Rev. George A. Hall was appointed upon the committee to nominate officers for the next year.

SCROFULA

Is that impurity of the blood which produces unsightly lumps or swellings in the neck; which causes running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or "humors," which, fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. It is the most ancient of all diseases, and very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. If you suffer from scrofula, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, my little boy, three years old, being a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. We all took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and all have been cured of the scrofula. My little boy is entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. A Dolls' Distric School.

One of the most interesting Christmas window displays that has been seen on the street for a long while is that now drawing crowds which block traffic in front of Almy, Bigelow & Washburn's store. It is a representation of a deestic schule of ye olden time. The schoolhouse itself is a weatherbeaten structure some five or six feet square, the end towards the street being removed to show the interior. Back to the front stands the old school master, cap on head, birch in hand, at his ink-stained desk. Before him are some 20 or 40 bright-faced boy and girl dolls all dressed in the school going garb of 25 years ago. Girls with sunbonnets, tuckers and pantalets, boys with much patched trousers and country hair cuts, sitting at their desks. In the rear, on the stool, stands the ink-begrimmed dunce, with towering cap made of an paper. The sweeping list hangs upon the wall beside the old broom, dinner pails stand under the desks, and the water and dipper are in a handy place. The general effect is very good, and as one gets down to particulars, the realistic part of it is appreciated by such of the passers by as have attended the county school of a quarter of a century ago.

New England Farmer, Boston,
whether it was possible to make an Electric Soap.—"In Dobbins' Electric Soap, Electricity certainly plays a part. It is a "remarkably pure article, of "excellent quality. It contains
"no soda or potash, apparently;
"refusing to turn red with phen-

"apparent; and the presence of "alkalies not being manifest, the
"soap has the effect of not
"drying skin, hair and nails,

FARM
AND GARDEN

IN THE DAIRY STABLE.

Arrangement of Floor and Watering
Trough at Wisconsin Experiment Farm.
L. H. Adams, superintendent of the experiment farm, made the following report on the arrangement of the stable and methods of tying, at one of the Wisconsin farmers' institutes. He said:

"We have had experience in several methods of tying, at the station, but none have given such success as the stanchion. There are opponents to this system of fastening cattle, but, all things considered, I know of nothing to replace the stanchions with at the present time.
The floor represented in the diagram is the same as the one in use at the experiment station farm, and has been for three years. In putting this floor into our stable we took out a plank floor with a 4-inch drop behind the cows; it was unsatisfactory. Our cows would get dirty in spite of a liberal bedding.
This matter of bedding is a point that we must spend thought upon if we wish to cut down the expenses of dairying.
With the floor represented here there is no absolute necessity of using bedding for the sake of cleanliness. There has not been a forkful of straw litter in any kind put on that floor in three years'
time, and there is not a tag of manure
on the flank of one of the cattle.

"This floor is six feet wide, and we can drive right in with a team and wagon and load the manure from the gutters
on either side directly into the wagon.
This floor that the animal stands upon is about fifty-four inches wide. This watering trough is made of two planks, one ten inches wide and the other twelve, spiked together, and the bottom of the trough is on a level with the floor on which the cattle stand. The trough has an incline

FLOOR AND WATERING TROUGH IN STABLE.

of one inch to every twenty feet, which is sufficient to carry the water entering this end to the other. There is an outlet at the other end to which the water runs after the cattle have finished drinking. Feed is given to the animals in this same trough. The drop is twelve inches from the slats down to the bottom. Whatever urine is on this floor goes right through and is taken up with an absorbent that is thrown between the joists which support this floor. The solid part of the excrement is left along in this drop. A cow in urinating will drop the water farther forward than she will the solid part of the manure, so that in cleaning out it is not difficult if the manure is out here.

"For an absorbent we use horse manure.
The horse stands over the cows and the manure is pushed through a hole daily down into the basement stable where the cows stand, and distributed along these gutters, and it takes up the liquid and keeps the manure of the farm all together where it goes out. If, as I have explained, the urine passes through these slats, you can readily see how the cow lies down on a dry floor."

When questioned on the use of bedding
Mr. Adams said he would prefer to have the cows bedded where there was the material for it, but many dairymen utilize the waste products of the farm
so closely that they do not have material for bedding.

Homemade Fertilizers.

Whether a farmer should buy the raw materials and make his own fertilizers
by doing the mixing on his own farm is a question that each individual farmer ought to be able to determine for himself. There are considerations, however, that should be taken into account in coming to a conclusion on the subject. First, the quantity required should be large enough to make it an object to save the ascertained difference in the cost of the materials when bought singly, and when bought from reliable manufacturers mixed ready for use.
Again, if the attempt is made to dispense in whole or in part with some one or more of the ingredients of a complete fertilizer on the score of economy, this can only be done by such as have through previous experiments ascertained with considerable accuracy the requirements of particular crops on certain soils. This will be found the most difficult part of the business, for there are large numbers of farmers who do not know what their different fields require, and who are not likely to spend time and money in finding out. Hence, in making or buying fertilizers it will usually be found best to use such as are prepared for general application rather than for special soils. The saving from home mixing will depend on the prices which sellers of ready mixed fertilizers are willing to take, and the cost of fertilizing chemicals delivered as near the farm as the mixed goods can be bought.

Potatoes as a Profitable Crop.

A New York World correspondent writes: "Taking the years as they come I believe potatoes one of the most profitable of our standard farm crops, and the consumption of them seems to be on the increase. There is no crop in which the production can be more favorably influenced by good cultivation and the use of manufactured fertilizers. If planted early, unless the season is remarkably bad, the crop is likely to be a fairly good one. When there is no scarcity the price is seldom so low as not to pay well for the raising, and once in every two or three years crops are light enough in many sections to make prices generally high, when even a small crop is a profitable one."

A RABBIT TRAP.

A Handy Contrivance Described and Illustrated by Prairie Farmer.

Rabbits are the easiest of all animals to take, for the reason that when in the trap they invariably sit down before attempting to nibble at the bait. A boy in trapping rabbits rides the premises of destructive animals, provides a nice dish
for the table and has his sport as well.
The common "figure 4" trap is the simplest form. The one shown in the cut is a handy affair, and is easily made as follows:

A HANDY RABBIT TRAP.

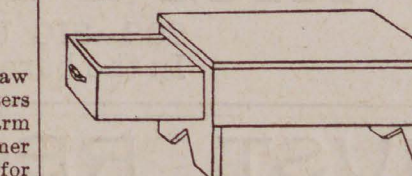

Nail three boards a little less than two feet long and a foot wide together for bottom and sides. Nail another one running up to a point or with a piece nailed on, as shown in the engraving, for the back. For the top and front nail two pieces together of the length of the sides and height, and fasten by a hinge joint at the back. The apparatus for setting consists of two pieces of wood and a string. Whittle one piece, which is about ten inches long, to a point at one end with a notch at the other, and put it through a hole bored in the back a few inches from the bottom. The other piece make chisel shaped at both ends and notch it so as to tie a string in the middle. Make another notch in rear end of the top for this small piece, as shown in the figure. Fasten one end of the string to the front of the top to pass over the notched stick at the back to the brace fastened between the notches of the bait stick and back. For a bait use pieces of apples or turnips, or even corn on the cob, the bait being fastened to the pointed stick on the inside of the trap. A rabbit entering the trap nibbles at the bait, shaking the bait stick, which in turn sets free the brace, and the cover falls. The notches should be only so deep as to fairly allow the trap to be set.

Sweets for Horses.

The average horse has a special fondness for sugar and other sweets, and this appetite has been successfully catered to in different parts of the world for improving his health and condition. Horses thrive well upon saccharine substances,
and it is said that in Australia and South America sugar and molasses are largely used as horse food in preparing them for sale; its tendency is to add flesh to the form and glossiness to the coat, both probably followers of healthy digestion and well regulated bowels. Colts also are regularly treated to rations of the fascinating diet. Sugar not only improves the condition of the colts, but it prevents risks of stoppage of the bowels or impaction of the stomach during the season when dry food only is procurable.
The manner of using the sweetened food is to dissolve the sugar or molasses in water and pour it upon chaff or cut hay, mixing well. If the mess is at first not relished, a greedy preference will soon develop, and the colt will lick, with the greatest enjoyment, the bottom and sides of the manger long after the last morsel of chaff and cut hay has been eaten.—Southern Cultivator.

Seats for the Apiarist.

"What shall we sit upon when opening hives?" asks a writer in Gleanings in Bee Culture, and immediately answers
the question in the following fashion:
"Why, stools, of course. Is a hive cover,

A HANDY SEAT WHEN OPENING HIVES.

a box or any other device so handy and comfortable as a light stool with a drawer opening at the end, in which to carry the bee brush, smoker fuel, matches, scissors, slates, queen cages and queen cells?
Then at the other end have a couple of sockets—one for pencil, the other for a heavy knife or chisel.

"Take this stool by the wire handle in one hand, your smoker in the other, and you have all you need for ordinary work,
and scraps of wax, with honey adhering,
can be shut away from robbers."

Weevil in Grain.

Where a building can be closed airtight, weevils infesting it can be destroyed by using bisulphide of carbon,
but as farmers' cornhouses are ordinarily constructed this usually will be found impracticable. On account of its inflammability, it must always be handled with great caution. Weevil in grain may be destroyed by putting it into airtight bins or casks that can be closely covered and setting a saucer containing a little bisulphide of carbon on top of the grain. The vapor, if confined, will descend through the grain to the bottom of the bin or cask and be fatal to the insects. Exposed to the atmosphere it is soon dissipated, but it must not be used in the vicinity of fire. The best preventives against this insect are cleanliness of the storage room, light and air.

What Others Say.

Hoard's Dairyman says that the thoroughbred cow will degenerate into the scrub if you give her scrub feeding and harsh treatment.

Southern Cultivator expresses the opinion that small farms will, to a large degree, solve the labor problem.

By midwinter a calf may show signs of not doing well. The best plan is to take it in hand at once and give it the best shelter and extra feed. If this does not make it thrifty within a month, sell it, advises Farm Journal.

When you want the best medicine ever made, use DANA'S SAR-SAPARILLA. It will cure you.

The Food Supply Is Measureless.

The fundamental mistake out of which grew the gloomy doctrines of the older theorists was in measuring the possibilities of production by what they knew of soil culture. Science had not revealed to them that, aside from proper temperature and moisture, the essential factor in vegetable production is plant food;
that this may be given to the plant without the aid of the soil; that what they understood by soil fertility is a comparatively unessential factor of agricultural production; that, in short, the possibilities of the food supply in the future are measureless.—Professor Atwater in Century.

The Rich Man's Son.

The rich man's son inherits lands,
And piles of brick and stones and gold,
And he inherits soft white hands,
And tender flesh that fears the cold.

Like soft hands, and tender flesh,
many diseases are inherited; especially tendencies to Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, and Stomach and Liver troubles; but these is a remedy, known as the "Golden Medical Discovery," which overcomes these diseases, and cuts off all tendencies toward a fatal result. Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, has put this remedy within the reach of all, so that even the poor as well as the rich, can obtain it. It is worth more to you than piles of brick and stone and gold.
Ask your druggists for it. It's guaranteed to benefit or cure in every case,
or money paid for it will be refunded.

A NATIONAL EVENT.

The holding of the World's Fair in a markable event, but whether it will really benefit this nation as much as the

just what the American people need to

THE Springfield Republican
For 1892.

AN INDEPENDENT, COMPLETE AND ABLE NEWSPAPER.

THE REPRESENTATIVE JOURNAL OF
NEW ENGLAND.

Established in 1824 by Samuel Bowles.

Published DAILY, SUNDAY and WEEKLY

The Springfield Republican is emphatically a newspaper for the people.
It publishes all the news that is news in the broadest and highest sense, unaffected by partisan or personal prejudice. It is enterprising, alert and intelligent in the performance of its duties to the public. It has its own decided opinions on public questions, and these opinions are expressed with vigor and ability, but they are not allowed to color its news columns. The Republican is a thoroughly fair journal. Members of all parties who desire to keep informed of the important political events and discussions of the presidential campaign of 1892 should subscribe for The Republican.

The Daily Republican

Was started in 1844, and is the oldest daily paper in the state outside of Boston. It has always kept abreast of the times, and has been quick to avail itself of the best modern appliances for the enlargement and improvement of its news service. It is now regularly an eight-page sheet with seven wide columns to the page, and supplemental pages are frequently added as the demands of news or advertising require.

It covers the news of the world with discriminating care and thoroughness,
New England happenings and interests receive special attention and liberal space, and a large force of special reporters and correspondents are constantly employed in gathering the loca-news of Western Massachusetts and the neighboring counties of Connecticut, Vermont and New Hampshire for its readers. Its editorial page broad in range, independent, elevating and interesting in quality. Its literary department is of a remarkably high order.
Its political correspondence is furnished by independent, well-informed and capable writers. It publishes, moreover, a great variety of interesting and valuable general correspondence and selections.

The Sunday Republican

Was published in 1878 in response to a real public demand in Western Massachusetts for a first-class, high-toned Sunday newspaper. Since that time it has been twice enlarged. Fully four-fifths of its 56 columns of space is devoted to reading matter of a high order, embracing news, special correspondence, a full page of editorial matter, a department of books, authors and art,
a first-rate weekly story and a weekly

The Weekly Republican

Is now more than 67 years old, but age only improves its quality. It continues to be what it has long been, a remarkably faithful and comprehensive record of American life. Its weekly review of the news is very carefully compiled,
and its 12 broad pages contain in addition to the news, a wonderfully rich collection of valuable and entertaining reading matter. All the best features of the Daily and Sunday Republican are reproduced in The Weekly in full or but slightly abridged, and arranged with admirable skill and intelligence for the convenience and pleasure of the reader. The result is a weekly news and family journal which far exceeds

SALEM, December 26, 1891.

The delicate Moorish fret-work, so much used in interior luxurious decoration, comes to us in more exquisite and appropriate form than in the fire screens which we are now showing in the furniture rooms. A great variety of intricate tracery; with prices unexpectedly near to the moderate purse.

Bamboo easels and tables at prices astonishingly low.

Much has been said about the merits of the various carpet sweepers but we yield supremacy to none over our Superior. It has given the greatest satisfaction to all who use it them—and they are legion—because of the easy motion and remarkable simplicity, strength and endurance. Most excellent Christmas gifts, surely. Walnut, mahogany and 16th century oak.

Another sweeper, the Crown Jewel, also made by Bissell, is a great favorite. The price brings it easily into any home.

Do not omit the furniture section in your stroll about the store.

Back building, second and third floors. New building, second and third floors.

We've had ten times as many China, Japan and art silks this season as ever before, sold ten times as many, and the rush keeps up in a very unusual manner. May be the cause is that we have had all there were of merit in the city, sold them for less than the other stores, and kept up with the day in new things.

Dark shades in 18-inch satin, 25 cents a yard. Just as good as 75-cent taffeta for skirt linings and underskirts.

MUSICAL FANCIES.

Traditional Stories on the Employment of Music as a Medical Agency.

As a medical agency music has in times past been much in request. At the present day in semicivilized countries where it is commonly believed that sickness is produced by the malignant influence of evil spirits, the unusual method of driving these away by music. In Burma, when severe illness of any kind has baffled all human skill, it is customary to abandon all further medical treatment, the patient's complaint being supposed to be caused by an evil spirit, which must be driven away before any chance of recovery can be expected. This is accomplished by means of music, during the performance of which certain mystic rites are observed.

But apart from the idea of demoniacal possession as the cause of disease, music has from early times been in repute. Pythagoras and Xenocrates cured maniacs by melodious sounds; and, coming down to modern times, music as a cure for insanity is alluded to by Shakespeare in "Richard III" (Act V, scene 3), where the king says:

"This music maddens me, let it sound no more, for though it help madmen to their wits, in me it seems it will make wise men mad."

Burton, also, in his "Anatomy of Melancholy" has given an account of the medical qualities of music, telling us that "besides that power it hath to expel many other diseases, it is a remedy against despair and melancholy, and will drive away the devil himself." Indeed, music may be said to form an interesting and important chapter in the history of medicine of bygone years, numerous remedies from its effects being recorded in medical and other works.

M. Burette was of opinion that music has the power of affecting the whole nervous system "so as to give a temporary relief in certain diseases," and Jacques Bonnet tells how on one occasion he was entertained by a friend, then in the service of the Prince of Orange, with the performance of three first rate musicians. This was the remedy, he informed him, which his master employed to get rid of melancholy whenever therewith oppressed.

Jean Ingelow's Poem "Divided."

Miss Jean Ingelow, in a letter recently published, tells the history of her well known poem "Divided." She says: "I wrote that nearly thirty years ago. My mother (newly a widow) took a house in the country for a few weeks, near Ongar, about a mile from where our friends the Isaac Taylors then lived. Passing one day through a field between the two houses I saw a little brook. We paused for some reason on its brink, being all on one side of it. It was too wide to be crossed, and we did not want to cross; but in imagination I followed it up to its source. It was a cause of division down there, but above it would not be; and I naturally appeared to perceive the two children at the source, and how it would divide them as they followed it. It was a symbol of those events in human life which naturally and inevitably divide. That really is all of the poem. It had only to be set down in words, and what little art there is in it is mainly within the first few words; for an 'empty sky' is always to my imagination as solemn as it is beautiful; and the beginning does not satisfy my notions unless in a work of art it belongs to the end.

AT EVENTIDE.

I know, dear love, that thou art dead,
That thy sweet face no more I see,
That o'er thy grave my tears are shed,
And yet I know thou comest to me—
Thou comest to me. Thou comest to me,
When evening shadows round me glide,
When daylight's cares in darkness flee,
Thou comest to me at eventide.

Again I see thine eyes so meek,
Thy shy sweet presence at my side,
Again thy breath is on my cheek—
Thy kiss, as when thou wert my bride.
So long since thou hast flown away,
My heart her grief can scarce abide,
So dreary seems each endless day,
But oh! how blest the eventide.

When night her benediction sends,
And thine nature seeks her rest,
Ah, then, with mine your spirit blends,
As blends the shadows in the west.
Thou comest to me. Thou comest to me,
Thy angel hands my footsteps guide,
My soul in silence waits for thee,
When falls each holy eventide.
—Jaye Jacques in Yankee Blade.

MARGARET OF ORLEANS.

"I wonder if it idealizes her?"
We stand beside the statue of this famous woman, Margaret of New Orleans, and, after the manner of strangers, conjecture on what we for the first time see, "Not at all," a voice answers in the soft southern tongue. "It looks just like her."

"Ah, thank you. You live here?"
"I was born here; this is my home."
"You were here during the war and yellow fever and everything?" and was Ben Butler so dreadful? and have you seen Cable?"

A nod answers each one of my young companion's impetuous queries.

"How delightful!" concludes my friend, but the lady shakes her head and taps her fan lightly on the girl's soft cheek and says musingly: "It did not seem as if I would live through it, but I have, and now comes one who calls my trials 'delightful.' How cruel!"

"Ah, pardon! But I was thinking of that charming man who wrote the delicious 'Mme. Delphine.' I was thinking how perfectly lovely it must be to live here and know him—and then to live in a city that has had such a history—it is so romantic. And can you tell us anything about Margaret?"

"This little space—'Margaret place,' it is called—it is a pleasant spot to rest in."

With this invitation, given more in looks than in words, we seated ourselves near our new acquaintance on the settees in the little park. The perfume of March roses overhang the city; we forget in its deliciousness the signs of decay that in portions of that quaint old town imparts a pensive melancholy to its beauty. Near by us in the green grass is a pool set about with a low border of cactus; a mimic fort, with all its bristling thorn guns out, and its blossom floating from the ramparts, which are guarding from such fierceness only a lazy fleet of water lilies, under the shade of which there is a whirl of goldfish. A stone footbridge crosses the pool and spans the river of cactuses. It is a very odd and tasteful device, this pool; and the little park in which it is placed is unique in its way. There is nothing overdone, neither neglected. It is a well kept, refreshing, simple setting for the statue itself.

"She was a working woman—a servant here. When I first remember her I was living near here, and she was taking care of the cows in a stable that stood almost on the very spot where her statue stands now. She was working then for the sisters of the asylum. She fed and milked their cows and sold milk in a cart about the city. She was a strange looking person—remarkable in her appearance. I think now as I recall her she had a broad forehead, serious eyes, a pleasant, broad smile, a rather short, stout figure. I do not suppose she ever in her life wore any dress better than a Guinea blue calico; she always wore heavy shoes and a black straw bonnet trimmed with a neat band of black over the top. From my residence I could see her many times a day while she was at her stable work or coming back and forth with her milk cans.

"What was her name? Her name was Margaret Haugery; she had been married, and at that time was a widow. Her husband and little child died just after she came to New Orleans; so we learned after she became famous. She was alone and poor in a strange country, and went to work in the stables for a living. Somehow, everybody liked Margaret; her smile was sweet and her words shrewd. The children called her Margaret, and she knew their names and answered their salutations along the street as she drove by in the milk cart.

"After some years Margaret had saved enough to buy a bit of ground that had on it a small bakery. The place was sold for a trifle, but now Margaret was in royal trim—a landowner and a manufacturer; for she opened the shop and began bread and pie making for the neighbors. Presently there was a large bakery built; soon bread carts were running over the city bearing the words, 'Margaret's Bakery.' It became the fashion to buy at Margaret's place. During war, pestilence and disaster Margaret's fires were never out, and the delicious rolls kept their weight and quality, no matter what else in life failed. Then she began running her free bread carts during the fever panic. No one would buy who was within sound of her cart wheels. From that time on no one need go hungry in New Orleans—those too poor to buy were given a loaf fresh and white as the best, and it was given heartily, with a 'God bring thee better times.' There was no distinction in Margaret's favors. She gave to white and black, of any church, or none. 'Are you hungry?' that is all that was necessary. 'Here is bread; take it with God's blessing.' There have been in this city dread days, which seemed as if God and everybody had failed us but Margaret; days when she almost literally fed the city. During the yellow fever panic Margaret began her noble work of taking the children from the homes of death and putting them into a house under good care, supporting them herself in every particular. Soon the one asylum

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhoea and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

Dr. G. C. Osgood,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

Dr. J. F. Kinchloe,
Covington, Ark.

The Centaur Company, 77 Murray Street, New York City.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. Archer, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

grew into many; the dozens of her little charges were numbered by hundreds—and at the time of her death thousands. At the gate of every orphan asylum in the city Margaret's bread cart, with its smoking rolls, was seen daily; at every charitable institution whatsoever she took the privilege of giving her bread freely, and Margaret's name headed the list for every charity.

"Our grand Charity hospital, one of the most famous in the world, was largely the gift of Margaret. You must visit that hospital. It will make you better all your life for having seen it. Right through the trees there, at the right, do you see that magnificent building with its four galleries running around the first four stories of the house? Its gate tells in golden letters that this is a children's home, given by Margaret, where to the end of time orphans will be cared for and educated by her bequests. Many of our cemeteries contain in form of handsome tombs Margaret's simple yet munificent thoughtfulness. Here you know all are buried above ground in crypts or ovens of masonry, and when you visit our cemeteries—as strangers always do, for there are no burial places like these in America—you will see stone tombs (containing one, two or four dozen bodies maybe) inscribed: "Given to the Little Sisters of the Poor by Margaret." "The Strangers' Tomb, Given by Margaret." I suppose, Margaret spent more money for the city than the richest man in the history of the state; and of the sympathy and discernment of the needs of the poor the half could never be told. She spent nothing on herself. A clean, blue calico, stout jacket or shoulder shawl, an iron bedstead in a room without even a rocking chair, and overlooking the bakeshop. She had no time to enjoy luxuries, even had she possessed them. As long as there was a weeping child or a friendless woman in the city, what time had she to fold her arms in a rocking chair? While there were unbred, coffinless forms, could she adorn her home of the living? And so it happened that to the end of life Margaret spent neither time, care nor money on herself. She forgot there was such a mortal as Margaret.

"And when, one day, the news went around that Margaret was dead, the great city aroise and put on mourning; the business houses were closed; all the employments of the city stood still. The day of the burial thousands of her little orphans followed her bier as mourners; every church sent delegations of honor bearers; the public school children joined in the throng; the houses were draped along the line of march; all the bells in the city tolled; civic and military joined in the procession with ecclesiastics; there never was here a funeral like Margaret's.

"Afterward it was found that her possessions had been so disposed that had death come at any moment the affairs of this life were well and intelligently wound up. There were no personal effects of value, but even her few garments she left to the poor, and with the proceeds of her wise investments her charities are royally endowed.

"This statue is the gift of the city, to show in this public way the esteem in which she is held. It is very like Margaret. The motherly figure, seated with one arm encircling a standing child at her side; the untrimmed dress, coarse shoes, the little crocheted shawl about her shoulders are homely, but who would change them for finer clothing? The smooth hair, with its old fashioned French parting; the strong chin, the pleasant mouth, the serious eyes—is there not something fascinating in the contradictions of the face?

"Did you ever see such a head on a woman's shoulders? Massive, wonderful! That is the head of a statesman and financier, while its mouth, with its pleasant smile, telling of the tact and natural suavity of Margaret's character, proclaim the elements of a born diplomat. Yet, look again at the broad, massive brow, and see the earnest, loving eye that speaks of a true womanhood; look once more at the coarse garments and you will see that poverty added her load to the ordinary burden of womanhood, while ignorance, bereavement, affliction, loneliness join hands with poverty against this soul. But the massive brow conquered, the untamed brain triumphed, and under the leadership of the sad, gentle eyes gave to the suffering what might, had she been a man born in other circumstances, have been the gain of nations and the glitter of the trappings of a diplomat.

"When I consider what Margaret did for one city under such desperate disadvantages, I wonder what she could have done for the world if all the environments had been right. I was thinking of that as I looked, in passing for the hundredth time, at the strong, fascinating face this morning, when your question met my ear.

"Yes, it looks like her, and there will never be another in marble like it to the end of time. She was a grand character—tender, strong, original, pitiful, helpful, wise."—New York Evening Sun.

Red Hair.

A well known physician, who has made human hair a study for years, in an entertaining lecture on red hair said: "The great Italian painter, Titian, was so fond of red hair that he raved about it, and at one time is said to have offered to sell his soul to the devil provided his hair would turn red. This passion for red hair has raged fiercely since early times. About every eight years red hair comes in style, and the belles try to color their hair in conformity to the prevailing style. They often use poison, and that's where we come in. At one period in history, however, red hair was the subject for universal scoffing.—Philadelphia Record.

A Misleading Sign.

A sign made of cardboard letters, hung on a wire in a furnishing store, announces to the public of Boston that the establishment is "Blank's Shirt Store." But the s of the final word somehow slipped along toward the preceding word, and the passers by were surprised to read, "Blank's Shirts Tore."—Exchange.
